But they awake curiously regarding the charges of Black Bros. & Co., and I. & F. Burpee & Co., that will not be allayed without an investigation, if there is time for making one.
Mr. Cadby reports having failed to find a considerable quantity of the goods entered by Fraser, Reynolds & Co. "free for the Intercolonial" in their accounts against the Government, and assumes that the missing goods entered into general consumption. This shows one of the beauties of the system of admitting goods free for Government use that we have so often denounced. Let the inquiry be extended.
Mr. Grant, of the firm of Fraser, Reynolds & Co., swears that, instead of having applied to his political friends for patronage, he studiously avoided doing so. He applied only to the department of officials, and did not know that there was anything wrong with the charges. He did not know of goods being entered free for the Intercolonial and then sold for private purposes, and did not believe it possible that such a thing could have happened. Mr. Taylor, to whom most of the railway supplies were furnished, compared their charges with those of other dealers and travelling agents, and required goods from them at the same figure, sometimes giving orders over their heads.

Consignment vs. O'Leary.
Further particulars of the breach of promissory suit of Consignments O'Leary have come to hand, and altogether make a readable romance. The plaintiff is not a shipping or a warehouseman, but has reached the estate age of thirty-six, and by which time a woman is supposed to possess all the wisdom that will ever be hers to own. It is a breach of promise suit, however the agent states, in a highly interesting fashion, as the tables show that after a certain age has been reached the opportunities of a woman for securing a husband grow less and less frequent. The defendant was not a railway contractor, but a young man who foolishly promised and repented; and was a middle-aged widower with a family of five children. His first wife died on 17th March, 1875, and on the 10th of July in the same year the defendant became his unfortunate consort by sending the plaintiff an anonymous letter, addressing her as his dear Mary. In this he stated he would like to see her, and she would inquire if the rumor was true and bashfully making a genuine "belle" by saying he would not sign his name to the letter until he knew the truth. The letter contained the following clue to his identity:
You will not be at a loss to know who I am, as I often had my arm around your neck, and you have written me, and you address a note to Mr. Patrick O'Leary, it will find its way to me by means unknown to you. I remain yours, &c.

The plaintiff, coinciding in the ingenious disposition of the defendant as shown in the above, replied through the Post Office, assuring "Mr. Patrick O'Brien that her name was not O'Brien, but that she would shortly leave Richibucto to reside in Boston. This brought another anonymous letter in which the amorous widower said:
It is very consoling to me to hear that you are not really engaged, as you are the only person living that I have any hope of seeing one day. I have written you something more substantial than an anonymous note. You must excuse me for not telling you my name, as it would do no good at present, but if you will consent to drop me a line, I will tell you all. Please excuse me as really I have not time to say more than that I will correspond with you and then I will tell you all. Do not think for one moment I would ask you to sacrifice anything for me, as I said before. My purpose, but God forbid, it is impossible for me to ask you to write to me when I do not give you my name, but I would like to see you, and you are going away. Please do not blame me, but this is the best I can do for you as soon as you read it.

A man with five children ought to have had a woman to get him letters of this description. But love is blind, and so was O'Leary, and he appeared to have taken the first opportunity to disclose himself to the object of his love. She came into his mind, and he thought of her with the mysterious Patrick O'Brien, and there amid the ambrosial odors of codfish, molasses and O'Leary's world renowned lobsters, he confessed his love and begged an interview at some more auspicious time and place. This was according to him on the following evening, and with a becoming modesty he offered her his hand and heart, provided she would correspond, but that the engagement should be kept secret. After this she went on her journey and the defendant returned to the unoccupied occupation of keeping country stores and putting up lobsters. A regular correspondence was kept up from this time and a number of letters passed between the lovers. Twenty-five of these, from the defendant to the plaintiff, were put in evidence at the trial, but the tender effusions sent to the defendant, having been destroyed by her, were not produced. During her absence he visited her and renewed his protestations of love. In the spring of 1874 she returned to Richibucto to be married and the wedding day was fixed for the 24th of June. The arrangements were made, but at the solicitation of the defendant the marriage was postponed, finally, on the 17th of September, he backed out of the bargain and soon after married a young lady of this City. The plaintiff and defendant each assert that the main trouble was the opposition of O'Leary's sister-in-law. The amount O'Leary offered to save suit and then the sister-in-law's objections was $400. She refused this and got $1400—thus making $1000 by the lawsuit.

Further particulars of the suit will be published to-morrow.

The Lumber Trade.
Messrs. Farnsworth & Jardine's Wood Crevin of the 1st inst. refers to the failures in February, which may be chiefly traced to overtrading at high prices. It is imperative, it says, that the supplies for the coming season be considerably reduced and the market placed in a healthy condition. Regarding spruce deals it says:
The arrivals have been rather larger than was expected, but have all found buyers at very little decline in value, and on the whole the tone of the market is better than might have been expected; this is owing chiefly to the suspension of all shipments from St. John and other ports, which will give time for holders to get fairly through their stock before the spring shipments come forward. Pine deals continue very unsatisfactory.
From 28th February to 1st March the import of St. John pine was 50,000, against 50,000 in the same period last year and 48,000 in 1873. Of New Brunswick deals there were 165,000 pieces against 84,828 last year and 42,768 in 1873.
The tonnage from St. John was 5,898 tons against 5,203 in the same period last year and 582 in 1873. The stock of St. John pine held on 25th February last year was 24,000 feet; this year it is 17,000. The stock of N. B., 4c, spruce deals held was 14,400 stds, against 16,400 stds. last year; and of pine deals there were 3,939 stds, against 5,061 last year on same date. St. John Birch, 17 inch average, has been sold at auction at 20d per foot, and a parcel of 144 inch average, at 17d per foot. Several cargoes of spruce deals have been sold at, from 23c to 25c per 100 lbs, according to specification.
Palings have brought from 65c to 75c per 100 lbs.
