AMONGST the most distressing and calamitous disasters that have occurred at sea, the burning of a French East Indiaman, the Prince, was perhaps one of the most dreadful, for nearly three hundred persons were either burnt or drowned, and some of whom met a "double fate!"

On the 19th of February, 1752, the Prince sailed from Port L'Orient, on a voyage outward bound. She suffered greatly during her voyage, from being driven on a sand-bank, and one day in the month of June it was found out that she had caught fire. Perhaps the most distressing and awful circumstance under which a shipwreck can take place is when it is occasioned by fire; it is indeed the case that death seems more dreadful, as the chances of escape are so small and the means of counteracting the danger so limited. The moment the captain on board the Prince discovered the outbreak of the fire he went on deck, whilst Lieutenant de la Fond caused some sails to be dipped into the sea, and the hatches to be covered with them to prevent access of air. Every means that could be thought of to procure water was resorted to (pumping, buckets, pipes—all were tried) but ineffectually, the flames baffling every attempt to subdue them, and the general terror increasing. Still, most of those on board continued as active as before. The master made a brave attempt to get down to the hold, but was driven back by the flames, and had not water been thrown over him he would have been severely burnt. They then tried getting the long boat out, but it fell on the guns and could not be righted. The boatswain and three others escaped in the yawl which they took possession of, leaving the rest to their fearful fate, which all now seemed to see was inevitable. Nothing but sighs and groans were heard, and even the animals on board (as if instinct warned them of the coming danger) uttered the most dreadful sounds. All hope was gone—the chaplain cheered and encouraged them all to meet their awful fate bravely, which they did. Self-preservation seemed now the only thing; some plunged into the waves as the mildest death of the two—others tried to save themselves by spars, hen-coops—any thing that came first. Nothing was to be seen but floating masts and yards covered with living beings, all struggling with the waves, many of whom were destroyed by the balls from the guns, discharged by becoming heated by the fire—

"What phantly ruin then deformed the deep!
Here glowing pinaks, and glowing ribs of oak,
Here smoking beams, and masts in slender broke."

Lieutenant de la Fond, who had up to this time borne up with the greatest firmness, was now well aware that he could neither save the ship nor any of his fellow-creatures. His distress at this was so great that he at first thought of sharing the same fate as the others; still, self-preservation was great, and taking off his things he sped down a yard, one end of which was in the water, but this was so covered with human beings that he fell into the sea. There he was caught and held by a drowning soldier. In vain De la Fond tried to get free, twice they went below the surface, and it was only

"In all difficulties, be patient, and overcome them by perseverance."
