

A NEW ENTERPRISE IN CANADA

ANGORA GOAT
BUCK
COST $750

SEVERN RIVER
RANCHES

Probably the most interesting department of the Severn River Ranches, to the Canadian public, will be its herd of Angora, or Cashmere, Goats. These beautiful and valuable animals are natives of Asiatic Turkey, and are very hardy in all American climates, even where the temperature descends to thirty below zero.

Although Angora breeding is a growing and extensive industry in the United States—there being extensive ranches in Texas, California, Nevada, Missouri, Dakota, Maine, and even in Alaska—except for a few Angoras kept for exhibition purposes in a couple of public parks, it is an entirely new enterprise in Canada.

Angora Goats are bred for their wool (called Mohair), which is long (10 to 20 inches), silky, lustrous, and snowy white, as well as for their meat, skins and pelts. They are exempt from the offensive odor of