For the Provincial Wesleyan. Little Lillian.

BY MARY E. HERBET. The wailing winds of March are here: They sween above thy narrow tomb; Fair Lillian, whom no sunny Spring, Shall bid, on earth, to wake and bloom.

Soon will the green-sward deck thy grave, And flowers spring up and flourish fair ; Unmindful as they gaily nod, Of fairer floweret slumbering here.

Brief was thy stay,-yet love had learned How soon to mark each dawning grace,-And strove upon that baby-brow. The future's mystic roll to trace.

Love dreamed of thee, when riper years

The laughing child, the sportive girl, Or crowned with woman's graces meek. Love dreamed of thee. Alas, how vain. How idle in a world like this:

Where Hope's bright blossoms quickly fade, And soon dispelled its dreams of bliss. Yet ye who mourn the darling flown, Say, could affection's yearnings crave.

A better, brighter lot for ber, Than that our God in mercy gave? Earth's cup but touched her lips, no more, Not hers to quaff its dregs of woe;

Her happy spirit ne'er shall know. Oh, early blest; oh, early crowned! No wild lament for thee we make : Love weeps to part,-but with its tears, Is mingled joy for thy sweet sake.

Its varied forms of grief and care.

For thou art safe; though on our heads, The storms of earth may wildly seat; Though oft by sin and grief opprest,

We tread life's paths with weary feet. Then safe within the heavenly fold. Made the Good Shepherd's tender care, Doth bid us patiently endure. For we the promised bliss shall share.
