WHERE NATIONS COURTED PEACE.

Dr. McKeough Describes His Visit to The Hague, Made Memorable by the Conference.

Belgium and Holland Contrasted—The Dutch Ladies—High Tribute to Immortal Works of Art.

The Hague, Holland.

Leaving Antwerp by an early train we were not long in reaching Dutchland, with its dykes, canals and windmills. Holland is a conquest made by man over the sea, an artificial country, depending upon its gigantic embankments or dykes for its very existence, the greater part lying many feet below the sea level, and, as our train rushed along near the shore of the North Sea and we heard the breakers dashing violently against those bulwarks, we fully recognized that our safety for the next few days depended upon their solidity. A constant struggle is continuously going on between the perilous sea and these stupendous ramparts, requiring a small army of engineers and men to superintend, strengthen and maintain them at an annual cost of six million florins. An accidental rupture at any moment would precipitate a terrible flood with most disastrous consequences.

Canals are seen to intersect the country in every direction separating rich pasture lands upon which herds of fine spotted looking black and white substantial cows were feeding. The canals serve several essential purposes. They are the main roads for the purpose of traffic, they also perform the necessary work of drainage, removing all superfluous water, and they serve the same purpose that hedges and fences do in other countries, enclosing and separating homes, fields and farms. We saw no locks, the water being nearly all the same level. Many boats were observed laden with vegetables, post and other materials, being towed sometimes by a man, occasionally by a woman, and one by a child and a dog with a woman sitting at the helm tranquilly rocking a cradle. Many people in Holland have no other homes than these canal boats, having been born on them, married on them and living on a happy and peaceful existence upon them. Windmills are a characteristic feature of Holland, and their great numbers in the landscape are one of the first indications that we have crossed the borders and left Belgium behind. Many of them are of immense size and strength. They constantly pump and turn into the canals the water that falls in rain and filters through the dykes from the sea. They are also used for sawing lumber, grinding wheat, cutting tobacco, etc. Reeling introduced, and before many years hence this picturesque element of Holland scenery will have disappeared forever.

COMPARISON WITH BELGIUM.

Although neighbors, with an intimate intermingling history, one quickly notices that there are obvious differences between the people of Holland and the inhabitants of the charming country we have just departed from. The language is euphonious and pleasing, but quite unintelligible to us. In Belgium a slight knowledge of the French language materially contributes to one's comfort and enjoyment, but to-day the universal language spoken was as a dead language to us. We were fortunate, however, in meeting, almost everywhere, some one who had, more or less, a command of our own tongue. Immediately upon entering Holland, the currency changed, and instead of francs and centimes we have guilders or florins and stuivers, the former being worth about 40 cents, and the latter the latter two cents, and it is not a very great exaggeration to state that francs in Belgium go about as far as a guilder, which is just twice its value, in Holland.

We reached the Hague, our first destination, early in the day. Storing our baggage at the station we were at once directed to a tram-car for the "Plein," an extensive square, situated in the central portion of the city, adorned by a statue of William I., and from which streets and team ways radiate in all directions. The Hague is the prettiest and most pleasant city in Holland, its political capital, the seat of government and the residence of the Queen and the Dutch aristocracy. This Dutch make their money, it is said, in Rotterdam and Amsterdam and spend it at the Hague, where they retire when their fortunes are made.

CELEBRATED PICTURES.

Quite near the "Plein" is the Mauritshuis, or picture gallery, the brightest jewel of the city, and thither we find our way. It contains the most celebrated animal painting in the world, Paul Potter's "Bull." At one time this picture was carried off to Paris, and was considered there fourth in point of value among all the pictures of the Louvre, which at that time contained all the best pictures in the world. The subject of the picture is wonderfully simple, a life-sized bull with its face turned toward the spectator, a cow lying down, a few sheep, a shepherd, a tree and a distant landscape. The wrinkles of the hide and the marks of his hoofs in contact with the earth and having rubbed himself against a tree, look so like reality. He looks at you with such an astonished and serious eye, rendered with such fidelity that your first impulse is to get out of his way. Paul Potter was born in Holland in 1625, and died prematurely when 29 years old. He painted his far famed bull, which has ranked him ever since as the prince of animal painters, when only twenty-four years old. It was painted originally for 1200 francs, and was sold for 2,000 francs. Holland would not take 2,000 francs for it to-day.

The greatest picture, however, in this small but wonderful gallery, and the one that I was most interested in, is the celebrated "School of Anatomy," by Rembrandt. Surgeons, even in the middle ages, were not always looked upon as "butchers," and Rembrandt was evidently not considered so by Rembrandt, who painted this immortal work out of pure gratitude for services rendered, and presented it to the Guild of Surgeons of that city in 1632. This work has been justly characterized as the truest and most life-like representation of the working of intellect ever produced.

All the figures in the picture are life size. The professor, Dr. Tulp, who wears a black cloak with a lace collar and a broad brimmed soft hat, is standing surrounded by a number of students and surgeons, who are all so grouped about a table upon which is stretched a naked corpse with one arm partially dissected. The professor points out with a pair of dissecting forceps the various anatomic parts exposed. A strong light, striking the faces and a portion of the dead body, leaving the rest of the scene in obscurity. It is a magnificent picture, and it is so singular that the attention of the spectator, after a momentary glance at the corpse, is riveted upon the interested and life-like group of figures, with their grave and scientific faces, that surround the body. As one gazes at the picture you cannot but think that the painter was a supernatural being.

Rembrandt, the greatest of Dutch painters, was born in 1607 in his father's windmill, and without much instruction became a painter, and possibly to himself, one of the most attractive sights in the world. We soon came to the conclusion that beauty is a rare flower in the Hague, and in fact we have several times remarked that more pretty women are to be seen in an hour in any Canadian town or city than we could find in a day in any city of Europe that we have as yet visited. The Dutch women, however, were, as a rule, pleasant to look at, innocent and graceful, with blue eyes, fair, smooth skin, and pink and white complexions, not, however, so marked and brilliant as the English girls, better figures than they but not so graceful and "chic" as the French. We noticed, however, many ladies that it would be difficult to diagnose from their conferees across the North Sea.

At luncheon, or dejeuner, which the mid-day meal is termed here, we could not but observe that the Dutch have fine appetites, women as well as men, and in regard to liquids as well as solids. A custom which we had not previously met with was to charge half as much again for your meal if you did not order a bottle of wine. The people we found excessively polite. When the car conductor requests your fare he bows and touches his hat. If you ask a question of a gentleman in the street, he will thank you and raise his hat. Policemen and porters do the same if solicited for information.

After a short visit to an interesting shop, filled with old and curious Dutch silver, we obtained a carriage and drove through the "forest" to the "Palace in the Woods," about two miles distant from the city, the building in which the celebrated but somewhat unsuccessful peace conference was held over a year ago. The forest forms a magnificent recreation ground for the people; few capitalists in Europe have any such to equal it, and it is a remarkable feature of this comparatively woodless country. It is a wood of fine beeches, oaks and alder trees, through which are beautiful drives and walks. They Queen herself rides here every morning upon a fine steed.

The palace is quite unpretentious externally and devoid of any architectural beauty, but the interior is charming. The largest room, which is the one in which the principal meetings of the peace convention took place, is a large and gorgeous room, on a high hall, gorgeous in its decorations, covered from floor to ceiling with brilliant paintings by the most celebrated artists of the Rubens school, representing scenes in the life of Prince Frederick Henry of Nassau. The covering of the furniture and all the drapery is orange in color. There is a small, pretty room, known as the Chinese room, furnished throughout by one of the emperors of China. The walls are covered with rice paper from China, the pattern being Chinese and beautiful. The drapery and coverings of the furniture is all tapestry manufactured in China, the ornaments and bric-a-brac being of Chinese origin. There is another room, in which the furniture, decorations, curtains, ivory, cloisonné and porcelains were all presents from the Emperor of Japan. In another room, which looks out upon the park, we noticed fine pictures of William the Silent and his historian, Mity. It is needless to say that our visit to this little palace was highly interesting and enjoyable.

Returning to the Hague we took an electric car to Scheveningen, a town two miles distant, one of the most frequented watering places on the North Sea, and spent the remainder of the afternoon at the famous Kurhaus, a handsome summer hotel, richly adorned with beautiful promenade and crowded with visitors, chiefly Dutch and Germans, whose main amusement seemed to be drinking wine and beer, listening to a fine orchestra dispensing Wagnerian music and breathing the crisp air from the North Sea.

CHANGE OF CLIMATE

Not Necessary in Order to Cure Catarh.

The popular idea that the only cure for chronic catarh is a change of climate, is a mistake because catarh is found in all climates in all sections of the country, and even if a change of climate should be of benefit for a time the catarh will certainly return.

Catarh may be readily cured in any climate, but the only way to do it is to destroy or remove from the system the catarh germs which cause all the mischief.

The treatment by inhalers, sprays, powders and washes has been proven almost useless in making a permanent cure, as they do not reach the seat of disease, which is in the blood and can be reached only by an internal remedy which acts through the stomach upon the blood and system generally.

A new discovery which is meeting with remarkable success in curing catarh of the head, throat and bronchial tubes and also catarh of the stomach, is sold by druggists under name of Stuart's Catarh Tablets.

These tablets which are pleasant and harmless to take owe their efficiency to the active medicinal principles of Catnip Root, Red Gums and new specific called Guaiaac, which together with valuable antiseptics are combined in convenient, palatable tablet form, and as valuable for children as for adults.

Mr. A. R. Fernback, of Columbus, Ohio, says: "I suffered so many winters from catarh that I took at last a box of Stuart's Catarh Tablets, and the whole family used them freely on the first appearance of a cough or cold in the head."

With children we think there is nothing so safe and reliable as Stuart's Catarh Tablets to ward off croup and colds and with older people I have known of cases where the hearing had been seriously impaired by chronic catarh cured entirely by this new remedy.

IS NOW A HYPNOTIST.

The Ridgeway Dominion says: "Mr. Walter Mills (son of Hon. David Mills), who has been making a study of hypnotism, for some time, has developed wonderful powers, for exercising those of Swedenborg, who appeared at the opera house, recently. Several gentlemen were present at a private exhibition given by Mr. Mills, and were much astonished at his success. Subjects were put to sleep merely by written suggestion and made to do extraordinary things. Mr. Mills may be considered a public exhibition of the proceeds to go to a local institution."

WHAT WE EAT.

Is intended to nourish and sustain us, but it must be digested and assimilated before it can do this. In other words, the nourishment contained in food must be separated by the digestive organs from the waste materials and must be carried by the blood to all parts of the body. We believe the reason for the great benefit which so many people derive from Hood's Sarsaparilla lies in the fact that this medicine gives good digestion and makes pure, rich blood. It restores the functions of those organs which convert food into nourishment that gives strength to nerves and muscles. It also cures dyspepsia, scrofula, salt rheum, boils, sores, pimples and eruptions, catarrh, rheumatism and all diseases that have their origin in impure blood.
