A Special Course in Thanksgiving.
It did seem hard to feel very thankful, left at the little station twenty miles from the college and twenty miles from home. The worst part of it was that there was no one for Christina Gray to blame for it all.
She might have been at home instead of being here, but she had chosen to stay at the college for a Thanksgiving reception, thinking to reach home in time for the family dinner by taking the mixed train that carried both freight and passengers by a shorter route than the one she usually travelled.
She had been the only passenger when the dilapidated old engine had broken down, a mile up the road.
Then she had walked to the village, while the train-men had gone back to the nearest telegraph station to send for another engine.
They could not go on for several hours, and Christina stood by the window of the country store that served as a railway station, looking disconsolately out upon the long, stretch of muddy road, bordered on each side by old unpaired houses.
If there had been even a beauty in the little village it had vanished when the dear November wind and rain had beaten the leaves from the trees and vines that had kindly hidden the defects. And now the barren ugliness did not make a very pleasing view.
The view inside had been even less pleasing, however. The genial storekeeper had offered her a backless chair near the stove, but every available box and barrel had been occupied by loafers, who stopped squirting tobacco juice at the rusty stove to stap at her, until she rose and took her stand by the window.
Christina's usually sunny temperament was shrouded in gloom, and she giving was all foolishness, after all.
What was the use of celebrating it, and travelling miles just to eat dinner? She had not really cared to go home, when life was so gay at the college, and the football game, the event of the season, was to be played in the afternoon.
She wished that her mother had not written that pleading letter, making her feel that she could not refuse. Here she was, twenty miles from anywhere, in a rude crowd, tired, hungry and cross. A pretty state of mind for Thanksgiving day! Christina did not feel that she had a single thing to be thankful for.
A gray-haired man came into the store and asked for his mail. The storekeeper, who was also postmaster, handed out a letter, which the man grasped eagerly. He turned to leave the store, and glanced curiously at Christina. Going back, he talked in a low tone with the storekeeper for a moment.
They were talking about her Christina felt sure, for she caught the sentence, "Engine broke down, an' she's got to wait until another comes along." The man passed her again with a curious glance, and Christina's face flushed at the supposed rudeness.
The loafers were going home to their dinners. Glancing at her watch Christina saw that it was after eleven o'clock. Soon she would have to purchase the lunch which the storekeeper had assured her some time before that he could furnish, and the thought of the crackers, cheese and dried beef, saturated with the atmosphere of the store, made her feel faint.
The gray-haired man was coming back up the road, carrying a package.

and Christina wondered impatiently if she was to escape from his gaze.
When she entered the store he came directly to her, saying heartily, "How glad I am to see you! You have plenty of time to go over and see your dinner before the train goes. It's pretty muddy, and I saw you didn't have any overboots, so I brought mother's along. They'll be too big, but I'll tie 'em on."
Christina stammered out her thanks for the invitation, feeling that any change would be a relief from the atmosphere of the store, and put her foot on the man, who was kneeling, ready to tie on the shoes. It was too late for her, however, as she was for her shoes, with their thick soles, almost filled them.
The man tied them carefully.
"Now we can make it all right," he said.
"Come on!"
She followed down the muddy road, splashing along, almost to the tops of the overboots, until they came to the last house in the row.
The house was no better than its neighbors, but Christina looked up with pleasure for a woman stood in the doorway, with a smiling welcome on her plain face.
"I'm so glad you came!" she said, cordially, while the overboots were being untied. "We were so lonesome without Faith, and it will seem almost as if she had come, to have a girl at the table with us. Faith is our daughter," she explained, while Christina was removing her wraps. "She's away out in Colorado for her health, and we miss her so, but we're so thankful that she can live there." Christina looked about the quaint sitting room, and found herself wondering how any one could feel very thankful who lived in such a place.
But the house, with its scanty furniture, was clean, and the unexpected kindness had restored Christina's good temper, so she entered into the spirit of the occasion, and was so sweet and friendly that the two old people fairly beamed with delight.
The woman bustled about the kitchen for a time, and then called them out to dinner. To be sure, the dining room was only one end of the tiny kitchen, the clean white table-cloth was coarse and the dishes were common, but Christina felt that she had taken down the bible and read a psalm of thanksgiving, Christina forgot all this.
The repetition of the sentence, "For his mercy endureth for ever," read in a reverent tone, made their grateful worship seem very earnest to her.
Then he offered thanks for the plain little home, for the dear daughter who was so far away, for the frugal meal, and for the privilege given them of sharing it with the young stranger.
Christina's eyes were dim when she raised her head to join in the Thanksgiving meal, and she determined to be worthy of the kindness and respect they had shown her.
After the dinner, when they were sitting round the cheerful little grate fire, they told her the story of Faith; how they had worked and saved to send her through school at home, then through high school in the next town; of her bright prospects as a teacher in the little home village, how she had saved enough for a college course; then how her health had failed, and the doctors had ordered her to Colorado as a last resort. She had taken the long trip alone, for the money would all be needed to keep her there.
The months had been so long with out her! But her letters told of gradually returning health, and if she could not return to her home, it was still a blessed privilege to have such a daughter, even so far away, and they felt that God had been good to them in sparing her life.
"Maybe she'd like to hear Faith's letter, the one we got this morning," the gray-haired man suggested. And when Christina assured them that she would like it, the mother, adjusting her spectacles, read the letter aloud.
It was bright and cheerful throughout, and at its close Faith said: "I want you to celebrate Thanksgiving just as usual, for we have much to be thankful for. Put my plate on the table, and at noon I will father to read the one hundred and thirty sixth psalm, for surely His mercy endureth forever toward us. I shall know how the table looks, and I can hear father reading across all the miles that lie between us. It seems sometimes that people are losing sight of the true meaning of Thanksgiving, from the newspapers one would think that it meant only turkey dinners and football." Christina winced over this. "But we know what it means, don't we?
How can people be ungrateful who are able to lift up their voices to Him whose mercy endureth forever?" Just as the mother finished reading the letter a shrill whistle in the distance announced the coming train.
Christina tried to thank her new found friends for their kindness, but the mother said:

"You have been a blessing to two lonesome old people. I'll write to Faith about you. It'll do her good."
"I'll write to her too," Christina said. "I want to tell her about my visit."
Then she added, as she stopped to kiss the mother's worn face. "You have helped me more than I could possibly have helped you." After waving a cheery good-bye from the car window, Christina settled back in her seat for the tedious trip, but her thoughts were pleasant ones.
At dusk of Thanksgiving day the whispery old engine, after many-side-tracking and windings of height along the way, pulled into the station where Christina's father and mother were waiting.
She hugged and kissed them raptur-ously, and when her mother said, "We must hurry home, dinner is waiting. We could not eat it without you," she gave her mother another kiss, out of sheer gladness that she meant as much to her parents as did Faith to the parents who had been compelled to eat dinner at Thanksgiving without her.
When they had reached home Christina looked about her at the beautiful rooms with their comfortable furnishings, and drew a long breath of delight.
She was so bright and winsome that the father and mother watched her with glad, loving eyes, and the father wondered a little when his daughter, usually a little indifferent about things brought the Bible to him at bedtime and asked him to read aloud the one hundred and thirty-sixth psalm.
In the little good-night talk the mother said, "I'm so thankful that my girl seems glad to be at home.
We felt a little hurt over your letter.
It seemed that you did not care much for the home coming, and we wondered if the college was wearing you away from us. But I know now that you were just hurried in writing it, and we are so thankful that you care for home just the same! It has seemed to me to-day that you care more for it than ever before." Then in the soft freight in her own pretty room, with her head on her mother's knee, Christina told all about the ugly, selfish, big and small, and how she had filled her heart. She told the story of Faith.
When she had finished she raised her head, saying merrily, in spite of the tears that were in her eyes:
"So you see, mother, the reason that I am so unusually thankful is that I have been taking a special course in Thanksgiving."—Lula Lin-

NO POISON IN CHAMBERLAIN'S COUGH REMEDY.
From Napier, New Zealand, Herald:
Two years ago the Pharmacy Board of New South Wales, Australia, had an analysis made of all the cough medicines that were sold in that market. Out of the entire list they found only one that they declared was entirely free from all poisons. This exception was Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, made by the Chamberlain Medicine Company, Des Moines, Iowa, U. S. A. The absence of all narcotics makes this remedy the safest and best that can be had; and it is with a feeling of security that any mother can give it to her little ones.
Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is especially recommended by its makers for coughs, colds, croup and whooping cough. This remedy is for sale by Randal's Drug Store.

until I used the fragrant, healing Catarhoseine. I am delighted to recommend this remedy which cured me of chronic asthma after scores of good physicians had given me up.
Catarhoseine is better for asthma, gives quicker relief than any remedy I know of. My cure is a perfect one." Try Catarhoseine, it never fails to

When Baby Comes
You'll Need Strength
No Mother Can Rear a Healthy Child
Unless She is Stronger Herself.
FERROZINE
Imparts New Vigor—Braces Nourishes
Strengthens Weak Women.
A woman's anxieties multiply tenfold about the time the new baby is expected. If her strength is exhausted and her blood weak, it goes hard in the hour of trial. Ferrozine should be used because it makes the blood nutritious and rich. By instilling new strength into every part of the body, it uplifts your spirits at once.
Childbirth is certainly made easier by Ferrozine. The following statement expresses the earnest gratitude of Mrs. M. E. Duckworth, of Durham.
It is a woman's story—of her own case—told that other women may profit by her experience:
"Before baby was born I was in a miserable, weak, nervous state. I had no reserve strength. I tried to build up, but nothing helped me. I looked upon the coming day with dread, knowing I was unequal to the task."
"Ferrozine strengthened me, and it gave me strength, vitality, and brought back my nerve and cheerfulness. From my experience with Ferrozine I recommend it to all expectant mothers."
There is more concentrated nourishment in Ferrozine than you can get from anything else. It supplies what weak systems need. Simply take one tablet at meals and you'll feel uplift-ed at once. Ferrozine makes healthy, vital, vigorous women, or six boxes per box of fifty tablets, try it. 50c for $2.50, at all dealers, or by mail from N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont., and Hartford, Conn., U. S. A.

The Evils of Constipation Are Well known and the next best thing is to know a reliable cure.
Mrs. W. Eddles of Stony Mountain, Man., says: "Dr. Hamilton's Pills are just the thing. They do right to work at once. I use only Dr. Hamilton's Pills." Price 25c. per box.
Mrs. Casey—"Yesterday was Mrs.
Malony's birthday, an' her old man presented her wid a silver tappot." Mrs. Murphy—"Solid!" Mrs. Casey —"Sure, yez be jokin'!" How could she put pay in it if it wor solid!"

Every
Two Minutes
Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why SCOTT'S
EMULSION is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits.
To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health.
Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.

Physician—"Diet is the main thing in this case. Your husband eats too much. That is a feature of the disease, and he should be watched." Mrs. Youngville—"But doctor, he is always so hungry. What can I do?" Physician (absently)—"Couldn't you prepare his meals yourself?" C. C. RICHARDS & Co.

Dear Sirs,—A few days ago I was taking with a severe pain and contraction of the cords of my leg, and had to be taken home in a rig. I could not sleep for pain, and was unable to put my foot to the floor. A friend told me of your MIN-ARD'S LINIMENT, and one hour from the first application I was able to walk, and the pain entirely disappeared.
You can use my name as freely as you like, as I consider it the best remedy I have ever used.
CHRISTOPHER GERRY.
Ingersoll, Ont.

Johnny—"Pa, what is a debt of honor?"
Pa—"It is a debt that is incurred in a dishonorable way, Johnny."

Minard's Liniment is used by Physicians.
