Mr. McGee, interrupted firmly and determinedly with the words "I deny the charge." At the conclusion of the indictment he emphatically repeated the same phrase, and a plea of not guilty was consequently recorded. On the question being put as to whether he was prepared to take his trial, he replied "I am ready whenever my learned Counsel are." The Hon. J. H. Cameron then named Monday as the day upon which he desired the case to be gone into, (upon Mr. O'Reilly demanding that it should be proceeded with to-day,) and urged the impossibility of conducting thedefence immediately after the arraignment. On Saturday, he said, it might be presticable to have matters in readiness, but as there was no likelihood of completing the trial on one day, he preferred Monday, so as to avoid the adjournment over smaday. His Lordship having intimated that it would be necessary for the witnesses to be present, so that the court might proceed it 9 a. m. on Monday, Mr. O'Reilly on the part of the Crown, consented to the postpone ment, and after a short conference with the Hon. News has been received from Dr. Hall, the gentlemen of an exploring turn of mied, who sailed out of New Lendon some four or five years ago, to go in quest of Sir John Franklin. The doctor writes that he has found a clue which may lead to the desired discovery. Some Esquimanx tell him that they saw a party of white men carry a body on shore at a certain place, and lay it is a brick vault, which was afterwards comented and covered with boulders. The doctor is inclined to think that this body is that of Sir John Franklin, but is going to find the vault, and satisfy himself before he returns. As the Esquimanx in the region in which the vault is cituated are not very friendly, the doctor has hired five trustworthy seamen to go with him. He purposes to set out this fall.
