SEATTLE OBJECTS TO CANADA'S LAWS

Enforcement of Coasting Regulations Pinches American Shipowner and He Complains to Ottawa.

Seattle, August 6.—Canadian objection to enterprises across the border in which American vessels are interested for the purpose of depleting Canadian waters of their fish, as shown by the recent seizure of the Dominion government, forbidding the purchase of herring bait by American fishing vessels, is also taking form by an enforcement of Canada's coasting laws.

The fine against the Erna, which is owned by Johnson & Ostrader, of this city, was paid only after Captain Jensen, of the firm, had entered vigorous protest against it and had declared the fine unwarranted and unjust.

The Erna's offence, as recited here, consisted in this: Captain Johnson and others interested with him in coal mines at Boat Harbor, Vancouver island, entered thirty-five business men and newspaper owners and writers from Victoria and Vancouver on a pleasure and inspection trip on July 15. The guests were transported to and from the mines free of cost and were entertained, housed and fed by the owners of the mine and returned to their homes without a penny having changed hands in the transaction.

A week or ten days afterward Captain Jensen was formally notified that the customs officers had been forced to take action by a report from the steamboat inspectors and had deter- mined that the Erna had violated the law which prohibits any except British vessels carrying passengers from one Canadian port to another.

Captain Jensen explained his views of the case, saying that he had violated no rule, that the people aboard were the guests of himself and his friends, that there was no ticket selling or collecting and that his act could not possibly injure any person or corporation, because of the fact that no steamer line was in operation between Vancouver and Boat Harbor in Victoria.

This dispute, like the trouble over the Canadian fishing regulations will be presented to the state department at Washington for consideration and appropriate action in the premises.
