

THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XXX
THE ENCAMPMENT OF THE CHEROKEES—A JOYOUS MEETING—THE SETTLEMENT IN DANGER.

A young, active brave, sure of foot and clear of eye, was appointed to accompany him. Together, therefore, they began to breast the slope, ascending and descending in zigzag fashion, and finding a way as best they could under the overhanging foliage, which formed an unbroken screen up the entire ascent. As they gained the top the ground became more broken, and breaks or openings occurred, which grew more frequent and extensive till the forest ceased to be a solid mass, and a summit was before them scattered over with clumps of fine old trees, whose giant arms had waved in that sublime solitude perchance for ages.

Hawkeye (for that was the young warrior's name) explained to Philip to observe more caution in his movements as they approached the edge or crest of the height, and never did he quit the covert of one clump to gain the shelter of another without a careful survey of all round, lest an observing eye should be upon them.

In this way they gained the group of trees which crowned the summit of the ridge, and Philip saw by the configuration of the ground that a few steps further would bring them to spot which commanded a view of the river and the valley through which it flowed. In his impatience he was about to rush forward to behold the prospect when Hawkeye grasped his arm, and by significant gestures intimated that they must observe greater caution than ever. He dropped down on hands and knees, signalling Philip to follow his example, and the two creeping forward with utmost care, they emerged slowly on the brow of the eminence, where a slight burst upon them of great splendor and magnificence.

From that lofty point the great valley of the Kentucky river was within view, and the river, itself broad and bright, flowing and winding downwards—a gorgeous sunset brightened all the west with hues of crimson and gold, and the level rays as they smote the tree-tops of the far-stretching forest, glorified them with a beauty indescribable.

The only sign of a human presence in this wide scene was presented by a cluster of black wooden buildings standing in a large clearing near to the side of the river. A high wall or palisade, formed of thick posts, enclosed the buildings, while short stumps of trees still standing here and there in the cleared ground showing that once the whole place had been a dense forest like the rest, till patient human industry had made the ground fit for cultivation, and reared on it fruit and grain for human sustenance.

This was Jerry Just's settlement. With a remote and secluded dwelling place for the little handful of people who inhabited those wooden houses and lived there in the solitude of the wilderness, on the remotest verge of the frontiers of civilization! How shut out were they from the world; how shut in among themselves—their joys and sorrows, their hopes and fears being rendered all the more intense by their isolated position!

Very pleasant it was to see the blue smoke curling up into the air, and two or three human forms moving about in the clearing and within the square which the palisade enclosed. It was too distant to distinguish the figures minutely, but by the flowing dress of some Philip could make out that they were women.

The following dialogue occurred in the Faubourg St. Honore, Paris, between a patriarchal gentleman and his granddaughter:

"What makes your hair so white, grandpa?" inquired the maiden.
"I'm very old, my dear; I was in the ark," says grandpa, humorously, but with a reckless disregard for the teeth, which does not prepossess us in the old man's favor.
"Oh," says the child, regarding her relative with fresh interest, "are you Noah?"
"No, I am not Noah."
"Are you Shem, then?"
"No, I am not Shem."
"Are you Ham?"
"No, I am not even Ham."
"Then you must be Japhet," says mademoiselle, at the end of her historical lecture, and growing rather impatient at the difficulty that surrounded her aged relative's identification.
"No, I am not Japhet."
"Then, grandpa, you're a beast!"

A movement is on foot to bring the Air Line to Clifford via Allanburg.

DEVICE FOR INCREASING THE FLOW OF WELLS.—M. Donnet, a French engineer, has discovered a method of increasing the flow of wells, by closing the mouth as perfectly as possible, by means of a sheet-iron bell, through the top of which the same passes which is attached to the pump. When the pump is worked, if more water is withdrawn from the well than naturally flows into it, the water level is lowered, and a diminution of pressure is produced on the surface; this causes an increased supply of water to come in from the springs which feed the well, and the total delivery of the well is permanently increased.

BOOK FOR EVERY MAN.—The "SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR SELF-PRESERVATION," a Medical Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Exhausted Vitality, Premature Decline in Man, Nervous or Physical Debility, Hypochondria, Impotency, Spermatorrhea or Seminal Weakness, and all other diseases arising from the errors of youth or the indiscretions or excesses of mature years. This is indeed a book for every man. It is the cheapest and best medical work ever published, and the only one on this class of the world's reading. 100th edition, revised, much enlarged, illustrated, bound in beautiful French cloth. Price $1. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address: PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, No. 4, Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass., or Dr. W. H. PARKER, Assistant Physician, N.B.—The author may be consulted on the above as well as all diseases requiring skill and experience. apply

DR. WHEELER'S COMPOUND ELIXIR OF PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA. Sandy Creek, Aug. 15th, 1872. The Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya prepared by you I have been for two years using in my practice, and I assure you that in my judgment there is no preparation of its kind that can compare with it where it is applicable. With feeble, anemic women, of whom we have so many, and in cases convalescing from prostrating diseases I should hardly know how to get along without it. In Dyspepsia it acts like a charm—in fact in any of the long list of exhaustive diseases it is THE REMEDY.
