"I'll bet it's Vaughan," said Beacon, in unsteady accents, as the horse and its rider came nearer and nearer. "Come along, Juliana; we'll open the little gate, and hasten to meet him."

And, so saying, the speaker and his companion fiew to a small, white gate, epening upon the highway; and in the following moment they were saluted by a merry, musculine voice.

"Hilloa, how are you?" And the speaker, a slender, handsome young man, at once vaulted from his horse, and, with the bridle in his hand, rushed to Deacon, and flung his arms round his shoulders. "I'm glad to see you again; old boy! How is the governor, eh? and our dear mother?"

ther?"
"They are both well, Vaughan," replied Deacon, warmly shaking his brother's hand. Then he drew Vaughan to the place where Juliana was standing. "This is my brother, Juliana," he continued. "And Vaughan, old fellew, you are standing in the presence of my intended wife—of her who will shortly be your sister."

tended wife—of her who will shortly be your sister."

"You are talking as if I know nothing about the matter," returned the newcomer, smiling upon the girl, and then offering his hand to her. "We shall become great friends, you and I, Miss Monkshawe." he added. "When is the happy event to take place, Deacon? You did not say in any of your letters."

"Because Juliana cannot be persuaded to fix upon the day; but I hope she soon will."

The girl made no rejoinder, but, blush-The girl made no rejoinder, but, blushing, cast her eyes upon the ground.

The little party (including Vaughan Prynne's tired steed) had been gradually advancing nearer and nearer the avenue which led up to the house-door, at which Mrs. Prynne, who had seen her two sons approaching, was now standing ready to embrace and welcome her returned wanderer

The Squire, who was an invalid, was by-and-by wheeled into the room; and after dinner was over, the two young men went out upon the terrace to smoke their cigars, and to have a confidential chat all by themselves.

Meanwhile, Juliana was alone with

Meanwhile, Juliana was alone with Mrs. Prynne.

The former was very silent; while the old lady went on talking about her two sons, praising them to the skies.

"Vaughan," said she, "would never have been able to travel about in the princely style he has, had it not been for Deacon's generosity. Deacon has given his brother thousands. Ah! my eldest son is a real blessing to the whole of his family. You ought to consider yourself a most fortunate girl in having won the affections of such a man. I know scores of nice girls who would give their eyes out of their heads to get him. I wish you appreclated him a little more than you do. He loves you dearly."

"Why, Vaughan is not dependent upon his brother, is he?" Juliana asked, without paying any attention to what the other had been saying.

"No; he's not exactly dependent upon Deacon. But as Mr. Prynne is an invalid now, and Deacon is very rich because of the fortune left him by his godmother, the latter has lately acted quite as his brother's guardian and benefactor. Vau-the fortune left him by his godmother, the latter has lately acted quite as his brother's guardian and benefactor. Vaughan is most extravagant; and, to tell you a secret, he has squandered nearly all his patrimony at those horrible gaming-tables abroad. Still, if he be steady for the future, Deacon will take care he gets upon his feet again."

While the old lady spoke this, Juliana's gaze was directed through the open casement out on the terrace, across which the shadows of evening were already falling. In the distance, she could recognize the figures of the two brothers walking side by side, apparently engaged in close and earnest conversation.

"And so you think Juliana beautiful—th, Vaughan?" said Deacon, with a proud air.

"Beautiful, Deacon!" repeated the other. "Well, if I were not your brother, I should envy your happiness, and, may be, try to rival you.' Deacon smiled, as much as to say, "I'll give you leave to try your best to do so."
Not that Deacon was at all sure of Juliana's fixed love for himself, but he endeavored to think himself so. deavored to think himself so.

CHAPTER IV.

With Vaughan, Juliana had entered upon quite a new life. He was gay and light-hearted as his elder brother; but foreign travel had polished his manners considerably, and stored his mind with much useful information. Deacon was frequently absent, as he employed himself actively on his farm, and the younger brother and Juliana were consequently left much in one another's society. Deacon felt rejoiced that his betrothed and Vaughan could entertain each other so con felt rejoiced that his betrothed and Vaughan could entertain each other so well; and their intimacy receiving no check, they were constantly by one another's side. Vaughan accompanied the girl in her daily walks, and helped her to feed her pet birds, and rowed her about upon the lake, which last piece of amusement she much delighted in; while she often entertained him with her Spanish songs, which she had learned in her dead mother's time. At first, Juliana had been somewhat reserved in the presence of Vaughan; but after a time that reserve wore off; and she was led away by his ever-buoyant spirits, and by the fascinating powers of his conversation.

One day, Mrs. Prynne addressed her eldest born as follows:

"Juliana is a changed being of late. I never hear her utter any of her scornful speeches now. She and Vaughan seem to understand each other a great deal better. understand each other a great deal better than you and—"

"Leave them alone, mother!" interrupted Deacon, knitting his brows, and keeping down the sigh that rose unbidden. "She is clever, and so is he. They are fitting companions for each other. I wish,

How Will She End?

Just budding into womanhood, so feesh, so fair and fine that we turn to watch her as she passes, she trips along the street a picture of health and beauty. Among the passing crowd of worn and wrinkled women, she looks a being of female weakness, from which the majority of women suffer in a greater or less degree. They might ness of face and form if they would cure the disastrous diseases which affect the womanly organs. Women are cured of such diseases by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It stops the enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, cures bearing -down pains, strengthens the nervous system, and restores the general health. It contains no opium, cocaine or other narcotic. "I had been a great sufferer from female weakness," writes Mrs. M. B. Wallace, of Muenster, Cook Co., Texas., "I tried four doctors and none did me any good. I suffered six years, bt at last I found relief. I followed your advice, and took eight bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and four of his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' now, mother, that I myself had traveled a bit, and polished up my manners a little. I'm far too countrified in my ways, I am beginning to think."

And Vaughan himself? He soon discovered that he had awakened new thoughts and feelings in his future sister-in-law's heart; but not such thoughts and feelings as his unsuspicious brother had imagined. And he rejoiced as he watched her dark, lustrous eyes wandering after him whenever he left her side. Ah! far differently did she look at him from the manner in which she used to look at his brother. In fact, the attachment that had sprung up in his heart for her, and which was hourly increasing, was being reciprocated by her in full.

An inward voice seemed to warn him to recede, while yet there was sufficient time to do so, and not to abuse his kind brother's confidence. But that warning voice became weaker and weaker, and Juliana's beauty and fascinating manners seemed to have thrown a net around him; and the more he saw of her the more he felt convinced that her presence had become assential to his happiness, and his to hers.

Yet, notwithstanding all this, the couple had never once spoken of their feelings to once another. Vaughan instinctively understood that Juliana was not aware of her own, though he comprehended them. He dared not open her eyes to the fact, and she played as innocently as a child on the brink of a precipice.

One morning, Deacon being absent, from home on particular business, which would detain him till late that evening. The would detain him till late that e Sarnia's Labor Day Regatta To Be Great Event---Baseball Games at Carling's Heights---International Cricket.

THE OAR. THE CHAMPIONSHIP BOAT RACE. Rat Portage, Ont., Aug. 20.-Excitement over the coming boat race for the championship of the world is increasing here daily. Gaudaur has got his new boat, which rides beautifully, and seems to have much more life in it than the old one. Towns is beginning to let out now, and his rowing is filling with uneasiness those who bave got their money on the local man. The English champion, who rows like a second edition of Hanlan in his palmy days, is now in splendid trim, and is rowing over the course in a time which seems eminently satisfactory to his trainer, Tom Sullivan. That Towns can beat Gaudaur's record for three miles, made at Austin, Texas, in 1894, is a foregone conclusion, accepted by nearly everybody here, but it is also pretty generally known that Gaudaur can beat it, too. Jake's record is 19:011/2, but if he is pushed, as he will be in all likelihood, with Towns in his present form, there will be a new record.

YACHTING. LABOR DAY RACES AT PORT

HURON. Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 20.-The Port Huron and Sarnia Yachting Association has completed arrangements for the races to be held on Labor Day, Sept. 2. The course will be a triangular one on Lake Huron, each leg five miles, with the starting point just east of the Fort Gratiot lightship. The races will be for class A and class B yachts, class A including all boats measuring 30 feet or over. The prizes offered are: Class A-First, $100; ond, $50; third, $25. Class B—First, $40; second, $20; third, $10. The judges selected for the regatta are Commodore John C. Shaw, Detroit; Captain Frank R. Rice, St. Clair, and C. O. Stillman, of Sarnia. Timers-Mark Hopkins, of St. Clair, and Chas. Mc-Kenzie, of Sarnia. The races will start at 11 a.m.

CALLED OFF FOR THE DAY. Larchmont, Aug. 20.-The third race in the Larchmont series between the Columbia and the Constitution was called off for the day on account of thick weather. There will be no more races at Larchmont, and the next race of the season with the Columbia will be at Oyster Bay next Thursday under the auspices of the Seawanhaka games ever played, and many a man given out really believes he has been unjustly dealt with. When at Forest the other day, the well known authority on cricket, Mr. G. Harvey, handed the secretary of the Barracks club the following highly interesting squib as a specimen of what could possibly occur on a cricket field. No doubt many cricketers will clip this out and paste 1:011/2. it in their cricket books as a memento of the manly game:

Shape-retaining,

When you step down, your foot sinks into the Resilia Centresole, away from the toe cap.

This makes the shoe a size larger inside, when your foot is widest, so the upper leather is never stretched out of shape over ball.

When you lift your foot, the insole expands from the outsole, thus taking up slack in the leather, preventing wrinkling and over running on sides.

The shoe thus retains shape and wears longer, because it is never over-stretched.
