"Do you know anything about it?" questioned Arley, with a long-drawn

Well, your patience won't be taxed so very long; they will return tomor-row, and then we must all make up our minds to be astonished. We know this much," Sir Anthony added, with a twinkle in his eyes, "that you are a 'lady born'-who knows but what you may prove to be a princess?"

"Now, Sir Anthony, you are, laugning at me! that is an absurd idea," Arley retorted, with something like an old-time pout. "Well, whoever you are, I hope will not be beyond the reach of your old friends, for we all have been very fond of you," he answered, kindly. "Never fear that; my old friends have proved themselves too true for me to ever wish to get beyond them; there are not many who would have been so steadfast as you all have beer in my adversity," she returned, feel-

Tut, tut, my child; your friends were very proud of you, after the nobie renunciation which you made. I know of no one of whom I am so fond, after my own dear girls, as I am of you, my fair 'Rose of Wentworth.'" Arley smiled and blushed, then sighed at the sound of that old familiar
