THEATRES

AT THE ALLEN. Not for many years has a pictured drama of the days of the American Civil War appeared in this city. For seemingly when the Great War came into being that once popular source of stirring themes was forced into oblivion as far as the screen was concerned. Perhaps that is one of the reasons why "Secret Service" with Robert Warwick in the lead made such a tremendous appeal when it appeared in Allen's Theatre on Friday for the first time. Yet it certainly was not the only reason for its success. It was gripping and gripping from the beginning to the end. The story dealing with its picture-sequences, chivalry and individual heroisms it comes rather as a relief to a world still shuddering from the horrors of the greater conflicts. The story dealing with the adventures of Major Dumont of the Federal Army, when he is detailed to secret service work within the Confederate's lines, comes from the pen of William Gilbert. When his story was adapted to the screen it was made even more gripping for many historic scenes which acted as a couch for the tale of love and war, were reproduced with great care and realism. The battle scenes, too, left little to the imagination, for last century's cannon and armament were used along with many other features peculiar to the war between the North and the South. It will be needless to say much about Robert Warwick. In this picture he excelled himself, for he handled a difficult role remarkably well. He was supported by a sterling cast throughout, including the beautiful Wanda Hawley. There are many important roles, which were all handled without a weakness. One of the funniest of Christie's comedies gave a lighter touch to the program. It was called "Don't Blame the Stork." It was not half as bad as the name would suggest. The sixth episode of the exciting serial, "The Son of Tarzan," called the "Killer's Mate," was shown. It proved as wonderful as its predecessors. Screen Snapshots, an Allen's World News and special music completed a program, which will be repeated today.

A. E. FOSTER NEW G. W. V. A. SECRETARY FOR LOCAL BRANCH

Elected Unanimously To Succeed J. W. Cunliffe, Who Recently Resigned.

Without one dissenting voice, Comrade A. E. Foster was appointed temporary secretary of the local branch of the Great War Veterans, when the executive committee held a special meeting last evening. The vacancy was caused through the resignation of J. W. Cunliffe, who had been secretary for three years and ten months. Comrade Foster will commence his new duties on Monday. He has been a member of the local branch for the past four years, and in that time has done much for the betterment of the returned man. He has taken an active part in all affairs of the organization, and up to the present was chairman of the executive committee. He has held other offices on different committees. Mr. Foster served overseas with the 28th Battalion. Mr. Foster will hold the position till the next annual meeting in June. Mr. Cunliffe tendered his resignation at the last regular meeting. Applications were called for, but none were received. Mr. Cunliffe was approached by various officials of the association, asking him to reconsider, but as he contemplated taking a holiday, he asked that his resignation be accepted. "It is with regret that I am forced to resign," said Mr. Cunliffe last evening. "I have nearly completed four years as secretary, and lately have not been at all well. I have no hesitation in saying that the association will forge ahead with Mr. Foster as secretary."

ACTION TAKEN TO QUASH CONVICTION Windsor Men Appeal Against Finding of Magistrate A. H. M. Graydon.

Through their solicitor, W. H. Furlong of Windsor, Timothy Hogan, Jay June and Austin Moran, who paid fines approximating $2,500 and had 100 cases of liquor seized a few weeks ago, have issued a notice of motion to appeal against Magistrate A. H. M. Graydon's finding. They hope to quash the conviction on the ground that they were not given the opportunity to reopen the case and introduce evidence to prove that the shipment was a legal one.

PREHISTORIC INDIANS KNEW THE SURGEON'S ART.

While the prehistoric Indians of South America have long been recognized as stone workers in the precious metals, their achievements in surgery have been given less general recognition than they merit. Amputation of bones was unknown to them, but trephining was of common occurrence. Some of the prehistoric tribes of this continent were familiar with the use of splints, as was recently discovered by investigators from the American Museum of Natural History, excavating in New Mexico, who uncovered skeletal remains to which several splints were still partially attached. In Peru and Bolivia, where stones known as the "bola" or "ball" were used, wooden clubs with heads of stone and copper were the common offensive weapons, complex fracture of the skull, with depression of the bony plates, must have been very common. A fracture of the skull sometimes resulted in almost instant death, but many victims survived wounds of this sort, and an attempt to remove splinters of bone that trickled the brain, or to cut out fragments that pressed upon it, must have become an early date a natural procedure. From such operations on external injuries to similar ones for internal maladies and possibly for religious purposes, the step was comparatively short. That trephining did occur in such cases seems indicated by the fact that repaired skulls have been found which bear no evidence of lesion. For performing the operation implements of copper and bronze and knives of stone and obsidian were undoubtedly employed. Rarely the method of boring was resorted to.
