Some Cheek

The drug store was quite near the dancing hall; but the druggist was not a dancer, and had been in bed many hours when he was awakened by the violent ringing of his night bell.

With sleepy words of complaint he pulled himself from his warm bed.

"Mine's not to reason why, or some poor soul may do a guy," he murmured philosophically.

Throwing up his bedroom window he allowed the first cold gust of wind to rush past him, then put his head below.

"What can I do for you, Miss?" he inquired. "Is anyone dying?"

"Oh, no!" came back in sweet tones. "But I'm dancing at the hall close by, and I have quite run out of rouge."

"Indeed?" snorted the disgusted chemist. "I am very sorry, Miss, but I never keep enough rouge in stock to cover a cheek like yours!"

Then he banged the window down and returned to bed.

Folks And Flowers

Mrs. Kowler—Those new neighbors of ours must be rich, judging from the clothes they wear.

Mrs. Wyse—That's a poor way to judge, my dear. Some of the most gorgeous flowers haven't got a scent.

THE APPLE

(From The Farmers' Sun)

Probably no fruit occupies so large a place in the estimation of the public as the apple. Certain localities have special varieties, which seem to do better than others, while there is also the seasonable nature of the fruit.

The first delicious harvest of the apple has its own place, then come the tall apples and late on the winter varieties.

The story of the apple goes back through history into mythology. The Greeks, Romans, Scandinavians, and Teutons, all had tales in their mythology in regard to this fruit. Wild varieties are to be found to this day in many lands.

It is not known when the apple was first "introduced" into any country. It readily responds to cultivation; pruning, digging and grafting are able to make a tree change from growing scrub fruit to good fruit. The Romans are credited with having introduced the cultivation of the apple into England. In the 17th century, it is written that there were seventy-eight different kinds of apples cultivated around London. In the United States, John Chapman, a New Englander, but better known as "Johnny Appleseed," travelled west from New England sowing apple seeds along the wayside, and urging both white and red men to follow his example.

In Canada we have a monument erected to the man who put the McIntosh Red on the market. The apple will always occupy a big place in the life of the people.
