THESE unpretending sketches of recent life in Canada were sent home under peculiar circumstances, and accompanied by an earnest-injunction from the writer, that her name should not appear.

The friend into whose hands they came, was unexpectedly favoured with an opportunity of communicating with the honoured Prelate to whom they are dedicated, himself the valued friend and editor of the "Remains" of the late Bishop Copleston, who was uncle to the husband of the Author. Having also lately published a volume containing an article on Canada, the Archbishop of Dublin was led to
