THE WAR IN PERSIA.

Our news from Bushire comes down to the At that date the troops were still unmolested by the enemy, part in the town, the remainder in the intrenched camp outside the walls and in the neighborhood of the wells. Pending the arrival of reinforcements one offensive movement only had been made by them: this was an attack on a depot of Persian stores and amunition collected at a place called Chakotah, 22 miles from the camp. The service was intrusted to Colonel Tabb, with a party of cavalry and horse artillery, who, marching out of Bushire early on the morning of New Year's eay, returned late in the evening, having accomplished the object of the expedition without loss, and, it would seem, without opposition on the part of the enemy. His service is acknowledged by the General in the following terms:—"Major-General Stalker tenders his best thanks to Lieutenant-Colonel Tabb and the

MILITARY RESOURCES OF PERSIA.

The military strength of Persia does not consist in the number or efficiency of the regular army, and when it is said that the king, when he takes the field, makes up a force of a hundred thousand fighting men, it must be understood that this is only done by taxing all his resources regular and irregular. It we except the Russians serving in the Persian army, and who have been encouraged by the Russian authorities to desert for that purpose, the most efficient troops at the Shah's disposal are the levies of the tribes, which they are bound to furuish when called upon. These consist almost entirely of cavalry. The military tribes of Persia, in many marked respects, differ materially from the other inhabitants of Persia, and are distinguished for heir hardy, generous, and coungeous natures From the vice of the rest of the population— meir inveterate habit of lying—they are com-garatively free. But, on the other hand, they re excessively proud, and not a little ungover-table. Under the influence of passion they will not even spare the monarch himself; and so officers and men of the detachment, which has not even spare the monarch himself; and so ocious nature. > The American Strain - A writer in Bell's Life, in treating of the blood of horses now up-on the Turf says, "The American Turf may be quoted again, as possessing a very good lived of race horses, many of whose ped gives soon become very questionable. The Sir Archy blood 13, I believe, considered very good, and American—not indigen ous to the country, but the result of their breeding from a partly Logish strain. The funous Buston proved it good. It now rea's with us to come to the senitch with the Americans, and, if Lecomic, Pryor, and Prycrass are tip-top nogs, then may we have to see them throw down the gauntiet to Findango, Melissa, or Fisherman, in an Ascot Caperace.
