A REVOLT

Among the Prisoners at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.

RDEN LAVIOLETTE SHOT DOWN!

Attempt to Scale the Walls Falls -The Ringleader Meets his Death, and his Followers, Cowed, Return to their Cells-Several Guards and Prisoners Badly Wounded.

Between four and six o'clock Saturday afternoon the quiet little Village of St. Vincent de Paul was thrown into intense excitement by the sudden announcement that an attempted escape had just taken place within the walls of the l'enitentiary. At once an official despatch was forwarded to this city informing the Chief of Police of the occurrence, and in return Chief Detective Cullen and Detective Lapointe were at once despatched to the scene, while extra men were kept in readinessawaiting further orders before being despatched, but fortunately another telegram was shortly afterwards received by the chief informing him that the rebellion had been put down. Shortly afterwards a Post representative proceeded to the Penitentiary, where he was most courteously received. A rapid survey of the building and grounds showed that at each corner of the walls there is a guard house and platform, occupied by an armed guard; these have a complete view of the whole yard. Near the stone wall on the east side is a low brick building about one hundred feet in length, used as a repair and blacksmith shop. Near the north wing is a large door of iron, reached by a flight of steps, opening into a passage which leads into the front office and entry. The guards are continually masters of the situation, and can detect the slightest attempt at escape.

From what could be learned as to how the revolt began it appears that about four c'clock, while a large number of convicts were working in the tailors' and shoemakers' departments, one of the convicts passed near the guard on duty and caught hold of his hands, while others soon came to his assistance, and the guard was at once overpowered and tied up with straps. So soon as another guard entered this department he was at once tied up and a revolver pointed at his head, with the order that if he was to make a step or cry out his brains would be blown out. At the same time other convicts were searching the guard's pookets, whence ammunition, revolvers and ward's keys were abstracted. They then proceeded to the tailor's department, where they changed clothes, and thence to the stone shop, where eighty convicts were busy working. Six guards were on duty in the stone shop and there was not the slightest anticipation of any trouble. Suddenly a movement amongst the convicts was noticed, but before the guards could offer any resistance they were seized, thrown to the floor, and their arms tightly bound. Their revolvers and rifles were taken from them. While some of the convicts were engaged others were constructing a ladder from two pieces of deals, about 24 feet in length, across which pieces of boards were nailed at a distance of every two feet. This ladder was made very wide and strongly, so that three men could ascend or descend side by side, at a time, and, as after developments showed, to be removed. the walls. There was no outery; the by the priseners, and will likely be compelled musical portion of the service published in Saturday's Post was then carried cut. After march to discover and the service published in the Tas intended to be used in scaling guards to defend themselves and the men were all desperate and armed with crowbars, knives, bricks, stones, and the tools which they were working with when the revolt occurred. It should be stated, however, that there was an exception to this in the shoe shop, where the guard, Noel Beauparlant, struggled desperately, but was quickly knocked down insensible by one of the convicts with a heavy mailet, and he sank upon the ground with his face and head covered with blood. The leavy seven-barrelled Smith & Weston revolver, 44 caliber, all loaded, which the guardo each carried, were taken by the priseners, who, numbering S2 strong, ablebodied, daring criminals of the worst class. carrying with them their rudely constructed ladder, burst into the yard crying out like so many devils. A rush was made for the wall near tower No. 2, epaur srw where only one guard was stationed, and he armed with a breech-loading repeating Alinchester rife and seven-shooting revolver. "Don't short," they yalled, and even as they gave utterance to these words convicts, who rushed toward the wall, cursing and throwing a perfect shower of stones. The wall was guarded by but three men at this time, ac follows:-Tower No. 2, Isasc Saunders; tower No. 5, - . Llube; tower No. 6, A. V. Parc. Upon seeing the men coming this rifle into the air to give the alarm. To the ladder, began to ascend like so many gether. squirrels, while down upon their heads the guards were throwing bricks and mortar from the top of the wall as well as returning the fire which was briskly kept up by the convicts from the revolvers which they had taken from the guards.

Several prisoners here succeeded in gaining the top of the wall, when the outside guards, who were at work in the garden, attracted by the cound of the rifles and revoluces, hastened to the scene of the encounter and as fact as a convict's head would appear over the wall would commence shooting at them. In this way the prisoners were kept at bay, and seeing that they must adopt some other tactics they withdrew from the ladder and started to cross the prison yard apparently to attack the woodes portion of the fence which forms a part of the enclosure. Here Warden Laviolette, who had been at work in his office in the main building of the prison, mearing the sound of guns rushed Keeper McCarthy to restrain him, seeing the condition of affairs at a glance, he called upon the guards to shoot down the first man who attempted to escape. The convicts, who were led by one Corriveau, Louis Viau (who recently was sent down for seven years for highway robbery by Judge Itameay), Peters (a life convict sent from the Eastern Townships for murder), Dezer, Holden and Hayes, all "old timers," then turned and fired a volley at the warden; who; alone and unaided, base of the brain, and went tearing its way out of the right side of the face, completely shattering the jawbone. A moment later another bullet found its way through the warden's wrist, inflicting a painful wound.

An instant later several of the leaders, who were all aimed, rushed toward him and were all armed, rushed toward him and discharged their revolvers full at the person of the now falling warden. A bullet struck him in the right side, just in the groin, and passed completely through the fleshy portion of the thigh coming out in the rear. The warden fell half tainting to the ground, and the men rushed on the wooden fence several yards distant, which they fiercely attacked with crowbars. At this point the fence is supposed to be weakest, and had they not been driven from it by the bullets at that time, to arrest him. They not been driven from it by the bullets from the rifles of the guards, they would undoubtedly have ancoceded in forcing an entrance and gaining their liberty. Finding the storm of bullets getting uncomfortably hot, and as now and again a convict would cry out that he was shot and stagger back under the wall out of range, the leaders picked up the bleeding form of the almost insensible warden and half carrying. half dragging it with them, but all the time holding it up as a shield from the bullets of the guards, they again renewed the attack.
Vian, one of the ringleaders, placing a revolver to the ear of the wounded warden and demanded that he order the gates to be opened on pain of instant death, but the warden, even with death staring him in the face and weak and wounded as he was, was not to be deterred from doing his duty. "No, I can die but once," came back the answer, and the desperadoes did not shoot. For a space of five or ten minutes the assault on the fence was continued, the guards not daving to shoot for fear of hitting the wounded warden who they still kept in front as a barrier against which they knew the bullets of the guards and keepers could not come. Here one of the committed recently. guards took a careful aim at Corriveau, one of the men Ewho was holding the warden, and at the same time directing the attack, shot him through the heart. Throwing his arms aloft and without a sound he fell upon the ground a corpse. Upon this the convicts seemed to become discusreged and sullenly withdrew from their position, leaving Mr. Laviolette upon the ground covered with dirt and blood. The guards coatinued firing until the prisoners had cowed and sullenly backed into the prison and were forced to their respective cells at the points of a dozen rifles held in the trusty hands of as many guards. After they had been looked up each man was searched, and,

Immediately after the prisoners had been driven back to their cells, the guards who were tied up were liberated and the wounded men taken to the hospital. Word was sent to Dr. Brosseau, of this city, and he at once left for the bedside of the wounded warden, whom he found to be very low indeed. The warden is about 60 years of ago, and occursed this position for the past five years.

There is general surprise felt among the prison officials as to how such a plan could be matured for such a time as this evidently had been, and come so near a enccessful issue without the attention of the guards having been drawn to it.

Yesterday the howling and yelling of the convicts were terrible. Shouts would go resounding through the corridors, to be repeated or answered from cell to cell. A very extreme spirit of insubordination was prevailing, and curses were loud and frequent, Altogether they acted like madmen, or as if they were impossession of a large quantity of liquor. One of the officials on being asked AN several shets were discharged at him by the | whether such was not contrary to the rules, replied that they could do nothing with them. This revolt has had a sad ending, and evidently demoralized and embittered them for some time to come.

At the present time there are about 274 convicts in the Euilding, this number is less from the shocs into the yard, Cuard Saunders' than usual. Those now confined are an exwas the first to notice them and at once fired ceptionally had lot, and Viau is one of the most prominent amongst them all. There the wall readed the convicts, and, placing has been too much laxity of discipline alto-at will be remembered that about two years ago another general attempt at escaping was made. The guard was overpowered late in the evening, and the convicts waited in the passages all might smoking and amusing themselves till the arrival of the relief. This individual never came, and, as it proved, fortunately. The warden, however, came in the morning with the guards, and one of these latter as the convicts rushed upon them threw a padiock full into the face of one of the convicts, breaking his jaw. This checked the rest, giving the warden and guards time to draw their revolvers.

It is frequently the case that at the Court of Queen's Bench convicts are tried for at tempting to escape from the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, and one of them, when questioned as to the difficulty of escaping, took out of his pocket a file which he had down the stairs and out into the had for six weeks. Viau, one of the ringleaders of the revolt, on Procession Sunday, 1869, entered the house of Mr. Galt, now member of Parliament, while police were notified, and instructed Detectives Cullen and Bouchard, the only two on the force at that time, to arrest him. They accordingly took a passe of men, and instituted a search. They learned while making inquiries that another robbury had been committed at the residence of Mr. Donegans on Ottawa street and during their investigation found a collar lying on the floor. Houchard kept this as a clew. Detective Cullen while proceeding along St. Paul's reet one night was rotified that a gang of roughs were loitering in a hayloft close by. The party was arrested, among them being the lad Viau. On examination it was found that Viau were a coliar of the same manufacture, size and mitials as that found in Donegana's house. #### PRESENTATION.

Rev. Father Lacombe, the well-known missionary, has been made the recipient of a large picture representing the Blessed Virgin, and the infant Christ, and on the other side St. Elizabeth and St. Jean Baptiste. The pic ture was presented by Messre. Angus and Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, on behalf of the company. The presentation was accompanied by an illuminated address which was road by Mr. Van Horne. Rev. Father Lacombe, although taken by surprise, answered in a suitable manner, thanking his generous friends and promising to carry the picture with him to his North-West missions. The company strange to say, not a weapon of any description was found upon them. But a search of the yard, yesterday morning, resulted in the that the liev. Father had done a great deal towards the completion of the company's

PRESENTATION TO THE 65TH

OF THE HANDSOME BANNERET OF THE SACRED HEART.

The church of the Gesu presented a brilliant spectacle at Grand Mass, Sunday morning, the occasion of the presentation of the banneret of the Sacred Heart, to the particular devotion of which the regiment was dedicated while on service in the Northwest. A description and a history of this banneret has already appeared in these columns. The sanctuary was magnificiently decorated with natural flowers, colored lights, etc. The sacred edifics was crowded to its utmost cu-pacity.

The Battalion upwards of 300 strong paraded through the streets headed by their splendid band, and on their entrance to the church the organist and orchestra performed Scotson Clarke's Marche Militaire. The ascended the pulpit and delivered the sermon. the altar. The flag of our Lord Jesus Christ, the flag of the British Empire, and, lastly, the banneret of the regiment which combined the emblems of the other two and which no regiment would be ashamed to carry either in war or peace.

Before the beginning of the Mass the banneret was presented by Mrs. Justice Jette and Mrs. Brainard to the Rev. Father Superior Turgeon, the celebrant of the Mass, who in turn presented it to Colonel Caimet.

At the conclusion of the service the regi ment formed on Bleury street, and marched through Sherbrooke, St. Denis, Berri and St. Lous streets to the city ball, where the command was dismissed.

In yesterday's parade of the 65th were nearly 200 of the men who had gone through the North-West campaign. The medals for the regiment have been received and will shortly be presented to the officers and men.

ORANGE MOB ATTACKS A CATHOLIC CHAPEL.

At a later hour at Orange mob attacked the Catholic chapel, which was crowded with worshippers, and smashed all the windows. The few police who were present were powerless to prevent the mob's work of destruction. The priest conducting the services in the chapel ordered the doors to be locked and thus prevented the mob from doing further mischiof.

SULLIVAN'S REPLY TO "THE TIMES."

Chicago, April 25 .- Concerning the publication of a story in the London Times about Alexander Sullivan and Patrick Egan being concerned in dynamite plots, Mr. Sullivan said to day that the Times is evidently duped by a minor Jules Verne of journalism into publishing romantic tales which were hawked through the offices of leading American newspapers without obtaining a purchaser on account of their absurdity. The Times should have learned from its experience during the American war that it is possible to be imposed upon. Mr. Sullivan said that the assertion that he had directed dynamite plots anywhere is false. He regards the Times' romances as a desperate resort to arouse English prejudice against the Home Rule bill. Mr. Gladstone, however, had declared that a similar panic in 1867 had brought a great remedial measure within practical politics, and in his recent speech he confessed without contradiction that many of the remedial laws for Iroland had been passed We quote Montreal No. 1 905, Ontario 750 under the influence of fear. Whether the to 85c, and Manitoba malt 85c to 86c per dynamite panic has promoted the chance of home rule Mr. Sullivan does not undertake to say, but if it has the Times gives credit where it does not belong. Its story is false in whole and in detail, he says.
