

Restraint of Government Expenditures

stood and we can proceed with the work with which we have been entrusted by the voters.

As I attempted to say earlier, it is never difficult for the Chair to understand that decisions will be questioned and that, furthermore, in the heat of the moment they may be questioned in somewhat less than the most temperate language. However, unfortunately things did go a little far this afternoon. They have now been more than rectified, and I only hope that the hon. member's intervention serves as a reminder to me and to all other hon. members that we have to be constantly on guard that when these frustrations build up because of some of our procedures, we ought to ensure among ourselves that we keep open the line of communication so that we can try to avoid a continuing difficulty that frustrates members who are, after all, attempting to do their very best in giving good service to the constituents that sent them here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In thanking the hon. member for Egmont for his generous remarks, I do now see that it is six o'clock. Therefore, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.
