The other question the hon. member poses is whether there is there any place for the independent member or for a supplementary upon certain occasions.

Of course there is. The hon. member was recognized for a supplementary only a few days ago. I have often gone to members for a supplemental. However, I have to take into account the number of members who are seeking the floor and what is happening on any given afternoon. The hon. member knows I cannot satisfy everybody on every afternoon. That is a matter which my hon. friend who may be rising later on a point of order may come back to.

I appreciate the hon. member's intervention and my answer is yes, there is a list. I am not bound by it. I can ignore that list and intervene to allow private members, wherever they are, not only to ask questions but also to ask supplementals. That is a right which remains with the Chair and I do not think it has ever been seriously challenged. I would remind all hon. members that it is a right which the Chair has had almost since: "The memory of man runneth not to the contrary".

If the points of order are not arising out of Question Period, something that happened in Question Period or something that did not happen in Question Period, I would ask hon. members to raise them later.
