

Great Britain and Port Nelson, to carry out the settlers, and to bring back the produce of the settlement.

The Agent in Scotland will have to make arrangements with the emigrants, and to superintend their embarkation; to make a selection among those who may offer themselves, to receive as much of their passage money as they have the means of paying, and to take regular obligations for the balance.—The price of passage must be fixed at such a rate, as will afford a fair and full compensation for all expences which the conveyance of the emigrants will incur. This, as well as the number that can be received, must be determined by the Trustees from year to year, according to circumstances.

The Agent at the Settlement, will have to collect the debts due by the settlers, and for that purpose to receive from them any species of produce which can be realized at a European market, and will bring such a price, as to leave a surplus after paying all charges of conveyance, &c. &c. The amount of this surplus is the criterion for calculating the net original value of each species of produce at the settlement; according to which the agent will be directed to give credit to the settler for his payments. Every article will be valued at a fair price in money: but the whole transaction
