At the Exhibition

In spite of the rain raining every day, the attendance at the Exhibition is much better than expectations.

There is no reason why it should not be so far as the Exhibition itself is concerned.

The display in every department is equal to, and in many cases surpasses, that of previous years.

The fish exhibit is a decided novelty, and the suggestions of food values here should be considered by householders.

Another hint in the same direction is given by the dairy building, where the amount of cheese made in Ontario every ten minutes is graphically shown.

The food values here are also indicated, and 18 cents shown to be equal to 50.

The horticultural building has a splendid display, and for those who like to walk about the grounds never looked so fine.

The rain has kept the grass and flowers in a fresher and more attractive condition than usual, and yesterday the grounds were marvelously beautiful with the background of the storm-tossed lake and a handsome yacht ducking and bowing in the whitecaps.

No one can forget the contrast the Exhibition offers in its peaceful associations with the great struggle going on in Europe, but all the more obviously one realizes that in this magnificent treasury of the fruits of the earth and the fabrics of the factory is represented the brightest material side of all that we are fighting for, and must maintain for the progress of the race.

Public Spirit

Ald. Spence has displayed a fine spirit in the despatch in the name of the Irish Rifle Club, of which he is president, of a car of farm and market garden produce to Valcartier.

He might have waited until it was a little nearer election time and given a big Christmas tree or a holiday treat of some kind to the people when it would have been more effective for election purposes, but he was not thinking of Ald. Spence, but of his country and the brave fellows who are going out to fight for it and for all of us.

Now that his deed has been revealed and he is blushing to find it fame, we may commend his example to all who have any opportunity to help or any means by which they can assist what is being done in this country to help out the empire's struggle for liberty with the German aristocracy.

Ald. Spence has not ended his good offices with his car of provisions. He has offered to lend from his rifle corps ten of the best men to train the proposed city hall rifle corps in shooting. These are the things that count in times like the present and are better than whole salvos of brag and oratory.

A Scrap of Paper

At the very moment when the German imperial chancellor was expressing vast astonishment to Sir Edward Goschen, the British ambassador in Berlin, that Britain should make war "for a scrap of paper," German newspapers were appealing to Italy to support actively the triple alliance because the treaties otherwise "would not be worth the paper on which they are written."

Yet the scrap of paper which recorded the obligation guaranteeing Belgian neutrality, was every whit as binding, and indeed more absolutely binding than were the treaties among Germany, Austria and Italy. The contrast in the method of regarding the two pieces of paper illustrates the typical German point of view. It simply is that Germany enjoys the peculiar privilege of ignoring treaties when they are inconvenient and requiring their observance when they accord with German interests.

Countries that are actually at war are not and cannot be impartial judges in their own cause. It is not difficult to devise spurious arguments in support of policies adopted for very different reasons or in justification of actions taken for no other cause than that of self-interest.

No doubt there are occasions when the safety of the state becomes the supreme law. But the occasion must be one that has been imposed, not invited. Fortunately for the allies the circumstances attending the outbreak of war are matters of public record. The whole correspondence, now published, can be read by even the most peace-loving of Britons without producing the least quail of conscience regarding the empire's entrance on this quarrel.

Britain labored earnestly for peace, but her labor was in vain. Honor compelled intervention and once committed there must be no stay until Europe is relieved from the incubus of Prussian militarism.

Newspaper News.

Of supreme and transcendent interest is the great war now raging in Europe, not only to the belligerents but to all the nations of the world.

The big United States dailies, for example, devote as much space to the war as do the newspapers of Canada.

Not only is the progress of each battle reported as fully as may be but a great number of despatches, pictures and special articles are published, which are made to appear of timely interest by connecting them up however loosely with the great conflict.

Thus columns and pages are devoted to "war news," more or less reliable and more or less to the point, and many news items of general interest are subordinated or crowded out altogether.

For example, the death of Pope Pius X. and the election of his successor, have attracted little attention and scarcely any comment. Had there been no European war in progress it is altogether likely that the despatches from Rome would have been as voluminous as they were upon the death of Pius IX. or Leo XIII.

General Carranza, Acting President of Mexico, has closed the port of Vera Cruz, and has taken other steps to compel the withdrawal of the American troops. The newspaper correspondents in Mexico, however, may as well send their despatches by slow freight. Not even Huerta, with his marked talent for publicity, could break into the front page now.

Niagara Falls, Ontario, was a storm centre for news not long ago, but if the peace envoys are still on the job, they could go over the Horse Shoe Falls in a row boat without getting more than a single line head announcing "Several Foreigners Drowned."

Congress is in Washington, but that is about all the information the people of the United States have on the subject. Possibly if our Dominion Parliament had remained long in session this summer it would have ceased to find itself reported, except in Hansard.

Of course in the case of a sudden and appalling calamity there, can be but one subject of general interest to the public. Take for instance the Empress of Ireland disaster. The night after there was an interesting if somewhat acrimonious debate in the house of commons on the condition of affairs at the Kingston Penitentiary, and upon the general subject of the treatment of criminals by the state. So far as the public was concerned the debate was wasted because nobody at the moment could think of anything else but the tragedy of the St. Lawrence, and the men responsible for the daily papers acted accordingly.

If the war should last for a year or so would what might be called the dislocation of interest in all other news continue? Even as it is the baseball games must be reported. Even with war in progress other subjects of great importance ought to be discussed and ought to receive the attention of the people.

The first thing anyone looks for in picking up a paper is the news from the front. He may be satisfied with the announcement of a victory or the general result of an engagement, but his neighbor may demand details of every kind. Many read the war news and nothing else in the paper. In comparison with the great tragedy of war and its far-reaching consequences all other happenings of the day appear trivial and unimportant, yet the rest of the world is not standing still while Europe trembles under the shock of battle. Every individual, every community, every nation is developing wisely or unwisely, is prospering or falling, is dealing with problems small by comparison with a world-wide war, but of great importance to the person or community affected. Here in Canada we have many problems to solve and difficulties to overcome which we must deal with ourselves, which cannot be brushed aside or ignored, nor is it desirable that they should be. Indeed, Canada can best aid the empire by making herself strong. Statesmen no less than soldiers are needed, in war time.

BLOODY RIOT ON GERMAN STEAMER

Fifty Steerage Passengers and Three of Crew Reported Killed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—A riot aboard the German steamer Bluecher, at anchor in the harbor of Pernambuco, Brazil, in which three of the Bluecher's crew and 50 of her 800 steerage passengers were killed, was described today by passengers aboard the Brazilian steamer Sao Paulo upon her arrival here from Brazilian ports, whence she sailed at the commencement of the European war.

The Bluecher was bound from Buenos Aires for Hamburg, under the German flag, when Germany and England went to war. Upon learning that she had been declared the Bluecher put back to Pernambuco. She had aboard, the Sao Paulo's passengers asserted, several million dollars for London and 800 Spaniards and Portuguese in the steerage. When Pernambuco was reached the three day passengers insisted that the ship proceed to her destination, and upon the refusal of the Bluecher's officers to do so, a riot was started. The bodies of the steerage passengers who were killed were thrown overboard, according to the Sao Paulo's passengers.
