

- lution, 186, 187; Napoleon III and Mexico, 187; United States and German War, 188, 197; and American-Spanish War, 188; and Boers, 188; present American relations, 188, 201; elimination of possible disputes, 189; Panama Canal, 189, 272-274, 276; and West Indies, 190; and Tahiti, 190; and affairs in Far East, 191; American trade competition, 191; American knowledge of, 192, 193; social relations with Americans, 193; influence on American thought, 194; on politics, 195; Venezuelan dispute, 293 n. See also New France.
- Franco-German War, American attitude, 188, 197.
- Franklin, Benjamin, and acquisition of Canada, 247.
- Frederick the Great, and American Revolution, 197; incident of gift of statue of, 201.
- Frelinghuysen, F. T., on Monroe Doctrine and arbitration, 111 n.; and Liberia, 139; and isthmian canal, 274.
- French and Indian War, 25, 26.
- French as immigrants, 52.
- French Canadians, as immigrants, 52, 253; and American Revolution, 247; present attitude towards United States, 257.
- Fur-trade with China, 314.
- Gadsden Purchase, 35.
- Genet, E. C., as minister to United States, 186.
- Geography, influence on nations, 18.
- Germans, as colonists in Russia, 48; in Brazil, 49, 208-211; as immigrants in United States, number, 55, 56; Pennsylvania Dutch, 56; decline of immigration, 56; assimilation, 57, 196.
- Germany, as European power, 3; policy of expansion, 5, 16, 206, 208; population and area of empire, 12; race questions of empire, 62; and Monroe Doctrine, 106 n.; and Philippines, 151, 199; recentness of American relations, 196; historical ties with United States, 197; and Samoa, 198, 321, 322; and American-Spanish War, 198; acquisitions from Spain, 199; influence of these incidents on American attitude, 199; influence of British press, 200; and Far Eastern affairs, 200; advances to United States, 201, 211; Venezuela incident, 202; American trade rivalry, 203, 206; present American relations, 203, 211; and South American politics, 205-211; Pan-Germanists, 208; and Brazil, 208-211.
- Government, policy of Northwest Ordinance, 28, 30, 36; people as sovereign, 40; status of dependencies, 140. See also Foreign policy, Political ideals, and dependencies by name.
- Grant, U. S., and Monroe Doctrine, 112, 114; and isthmian canal, 273.
- Granville, Earl of, and Clayton-Bulwer treaty, 274.
- Great Britain, as European power, 2; growth of colonies, 4; policy of expansion, 5; and European interests, 13, 99; population and area of empire, 9; race questions of empire, 62; Venezuela boundary incident, 80, 103-105; and Holy Alliance, 96, 98; Japanese alliance, 99; increase of empire in America since Monroe Doctrine, 101; present attitude toward Monroe Doctrine, 106; and imperial Zollverein, 179, 242; and "open door," 181; as source of American knowledge of continental Europe, 192, 193, 200, 219; and France, 193; and Germany, 200; intervention in Venezuela, 202, 241; reasons for importance in American foreign relations, 228, 233; ill-feelings after Revolution, 229, 230; boundary disputes, 230, 241; fisheries disputes, 231; disputes over Central America, 232; and Civil War, 232; American anti-British education, 233; hostility of American Irish and Germans, 234; American resentment of criticism by, 235; former attitude towards Americans, 235; harmonizing influences, 235; mutual mollification of hostility, 236; attitude during American-Spanish War, causes and effects, 237-239; isolation, 238; America and South African War, 239, 240; present and future American relations, 241-244; and Far Eastern affairs, 242; social ties, 242; potency of kinship, 243; and American relations with Canada, 244; imperial federation, 262-264; strategic position in Caribbean, 267; American rivalry in West Indies, 270, 271; Clayton-Bulwer treaty and its abrogation, 272, 274, 275; and isthmian canal, 273; end of rivalry, 275;