

ence necessary for the purposes of intellectual existence, . . . Proverbs owe their origin to the gathered experience which me- mory treasures, . . . The scenes which memory por- trays, . . . Peculiar characteristic of memory, . . . Memory will survive the grave, . . . New law of memory in the future world, . . . The surveys of memory in the fu- ture world, . . . Imagination blends with the opera- tion of memory, . . . Memory furnishes many of its ma- terials to imagination, . . . Different kinds of memory: the question answered,—whether a great memory and an enlarged or philosophic judgment are com- patible? . . . Memory assisted by attention, and that by the interest taken in any given subject, . . . XII. By the phenomenon of memory the consciousness of one moment prolonged into the next, . . . From this is obtained the feeling of personal identity, . . . Personal identity, . . . The precise question, . . . The identity of the body, . . . The identity of the soul, . . . XIII. Identity as a law of mind, . . . Resemblance as a law of mind, . . . Classification proceeds upon this law, . . . The law of contrast, . . . How far there must be resemblances and contrasts in objects and quali- ties as existing in the universe, . . .	. . . 113 . . . 114 . . . 114 . . . 115 . . . 115 . . . 115 . . . 116 . . . 116 . . . 119 . . . 119 . . . 122 . . . 123 . . . 123 . . . 123 . . . 127 . . . 130 . . . 134 . . . 135 . . . 136 . . . 139 . . . 142	The beautiful effect of the law of contrast, . . . Analogy, . . . A species of resemblance, . . . The rationale of this law, . . . The power of detecting analogies the great scientific, and the great poetic, faculty, . . . Difference between scientific and poetic analogies, . . . Illustrations derived from analogy, . . . Difference between resemblance and analogy, . . . The law of proportion, . . . Considered under its different as- pects, . . . The principles of the mind, . . . Causality, . . . Generalization, . . . Deduction, . . . On the respective natures of induc- tion and deduction, . . . XV. Ideas obtained, . . . Review of the process by which these are obtained, . . . Classification of the sciences ac- cording to the fundamental and modified ideas, . . . XVI. Association of ideas, . . . Dr. Brown's secondary laws of as- sociation, . . . Remarks upon Dr. Brown's sixth se- condary law, that "the influence of the primary laws of suggestion is greatly modified by original constitutional differences," . . . XVII. Classifications of the intellectual phenomena considered, . . . The author's view of mind further explicated, . . . Controversy as to the nature of ideas, . . .	PAGE . . . 144 . . . 147 . . . 147 . . . 147 . . . 149 . . . 149 . . . 152 . . . 155 . . . 156 . . . 156 . . . 168 . . . 169 . . . 172 . . . 191 . . . 205 . . . 214 . . . 214 . . . 218 . . . 219 . . . 225 . . . 230 . . . 238 . . . 244 . . . 248
--	--	--	---