otal depravity of infants.
Undoubtedly the ability to turn the undoubtedly the ability to turn the me page into a comic supplement does uch to make the family circle a pleasit place in which to live, but a sense fun is like a good many other things the world. It is desirable only in the met place and time and with the cortangle in the world. It is desirable only a right place and time and with the correct application.

And the most pestiferous pest on earth is the family humorist who sharpens his wits on the peculiarities and weaknesses of those of his own household and makes of those of his own household and makes their foibles and mistakes a peg on which to hang his cruel jokes.

He is the man who makes a Roman holiday by holding his wife up to ridicule. All of his choicest batch of humorous ancedotes centre around some silly blunder his wife has made, or some weakness that she possesses. Mostly they have to do with her not knowing which is the business end of a cheque, and of thinking that she still has money in the bank as long as she has blank cheques in her book. Or they deal with her efforts to economize by selling a seventy-five cents to the garbage man; or the panic she got into when she thought the least who men whose whole stockwas of which was used so effectively in the Victory Loan Campaign.

MISSIONARY FROM CHINA.

Rev. Father John Fraser, one of the best known of English-speaking mis Bobbie's pronunciation until little Bobbie grows perfectly insane with baffled rage.

He thinks it is exquisitely funny to reduce little Mary to tears by pretending to steal her dolly.

And he tells the things that little Willie has told him in the deepest confidence right before little Willie, and the grownups scream with laughter and little Willie dies a thousand deaths of agony as his sensitive little soul shrivels up within him.

How any human being can be callous

How any human being can be callous enough to try to be funny at the expense of a helpless little child, how anybody can be brutal enough to torture a child by teasing it for amusement, passes the comprehension of any save those committed to the gospel of frightfulness, but it is a common enough sport in the

Especially is this true of family life. Humor is the sum of a household is concerned, it is better for the husband amiss than it is for him to be able to make jokes when things or make millions, while in retaining a husband's affections and keeping him strong in the belief that he has married the Right One, it availed a woman more to have a funny bone than it does to have a forcian profile.

We all know men whose whole stockin-trade of merry jests are jokes of which their wives are the butts. We have all sat at dinner tables and pretended to be amused and simply ached to throttle the men who were willing to make their wives figures of fun to get a laugh, while the poor women listened with quivering lips and tear-filled eyes, trying to be sports and to look as if they enjoyed being lampooned and guffawed at.

sports and to look as it they elloyed stand lampooned and guifawed at.

Another pleasing trick of the family humorist is to flay his victim alive with the lashes of ridicule, which hurt worse than the whip of scorpions of tradition. Perhaps his wife is slow of body and slow of mind. He is never weary of taunting her with her heaviness and dullness. Perhaps his wife may be a foolish woman with fuddled judgment. He stabs her with sarcastic references to her Solomon-like wisdom and perspicacity. Perhaps his wife is an over-anxious mother. He makes even that sacred passion a thing to laugh and sneer at.

Wite baiting can go no further than this, for there is nothing that hurts like ridicule, nothing that we so fear and dread, nothing against which we are so helpless to defend ourselves. The wife whose husband makes fun of her personal peculiarities, and grows sarcastic over her mistakes, envies the woman whose husband merely beats her up when he grows peevish with her.

Another place where the family humorist is simply scintillates is in teasing children. He delights in rymincking little Bobbie's pronunciation until little Bobbie grows perfectly insane with haffled rage. He thinks it is exquisitely funny to re-

INDIANS ARE PATRIOTIC.

Out of 29 families who make up the Indian reserve on Georgina Island, near Jackson's Point, 14 young men have been at the front since the beginning of the war. Out of the 114 who make up the entire settlement, the greater portion are women and children. The women spend a good deal of their time in weaving baskets and making novelties, which they sell to tourists in order to swell their contribution to patriotic giving.

The Toronto Board of Health at its neeting yesterday afternoon added its contribution to the discussion in connection with the housing problem, but beyond a general discussion nothing and sub-committees dealing with this question," said Ald. Cowan. "Too many cooks spoil the broth."

Chairman Risk thought that representative public opinion on the housing problem should be secured. As far as he was concerned the board should take no further action now that activity had been stirred up. "The board may lay it over," he said, "but I am done with it. This board took the first steps and if we waited for the co-operation of the other bodies we would just get reports and nothing but reports."

Griffith's supreme triumph, "Hearts of the World," because of crowded Six Also Take First Vows, houses, this picture will be shown at commencing Saturday, and the four weeks' record run of this marvelous production will come to a close at that house on Friday August 23.

"Hearts of the World" has been performing on the western battlefield. It also goes further than that and shows the unbearable conditions existing in the French and Belgian towns now under the iron heel of the savage Huns. Mr. Griffith selected a peaceful French village and has woven a charming love story about it.
The beginning of the war sees the which the Huns spread thrucut the town. But the courageous French push back the Germans and retake the village, amid rejoicing of the inhabitants. The story is one which cannot fail to inspire one with the cause of the allies, and it is a protection of the allies, and it is a protection of the allies, and it is a protection.

But the courageous French gation which filled the chapel to overflowing. Rev. T. Sullivan, Thorold, the story is one which the cause of the allies, and it is a protection of the allies of the alli phecy of final victory of the allied armies which is not too far off.
