MR. STURGEON IN TWO LECTURES IN IMPERIAL THEATRE

Mr. Sturgeon in his two lectures at the Imperial yesterday afternoon and evening reached the hearts of his hearers—good audiences being present. Some of the leading thoughts in his afternoon address, subject, "What will Christ do with the Keys of Hell," are here noted. Somehow, said the speaker, we had got the wrong idea as to what constituted the possession of these keys. Sorrow and heartache had come through neglect of our Lord's words on this subject. Daniel's Inferno was cited as an illustration of what human imagination could conjure up if our thoughts were directed into wrong channels. This picture suggested in a forcible way the theological idea—not the Bible idea—that the entry of our race had the keys of hell, and that he would never unlock the doors of his prison for a member of the human race. It was a wrong thought we had entertained that such was the fate of many of the noblest of men who without ever claiming to be followers of Christ were ready to die in defence of home and friends. God, said the speaker, had a better way of rewarding such men. The keys were committed to One who would use them in the service of those for whom He died—because He loved them. Christ, alone could tell us what constituted the keys of hell, for He had been there. David, speaking prophetically for Him, represented Him as saying, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell." We hear Christ speaking, "I am He that liveth and was dead, and am alive forevermore, and have the keys of hell and of death."

That is a good message, and we can rest assured the use of these keys will be in the interest of those in the prison-house. Britain and her colonies were giving their best in self-sacrifice in the interest of home and friends, and of us all. Let all sad hearts in this time of bereavement and trial take courage in the promise of deliverance and how it is coming about. Tell the soldiers, who are dying for us, of God's generous arrangements for the ultimate blessing of all.

Hang Up De Fiddle and De Bow. (C. J. B., in London Spectator.) When I was at Cambridge what was called "the Daily Telegraph" version of "Uncle Ned" was popular, and I well remember one who is now an ornament of the judicial bench singing it with considerable address. It requires a consummate mastery of the art of using one's breath in order to avoid disaster. The whole song is too long for quotation, but the third verse and chorus are, perhaps, the gem of the whole.

It was on a morning remarkable for the inclemency of the weather when the poor old member of the colored population departed from this vale of tears, and his numerous friends and relatives all shed the bitter effluvia dewdrop of sorrow.

When they reflected that there was an antecedent improbability which no human testimony could surmount. That they would ever again behold the face of this member of the colored population any more.

Suspend up the agricultural implements, let the musical paraphernalia be dependent from the wall; For there's no more manual or instrumental labor, or amusement, for our avuncular relative Edward.

Seeing that he has departed to that bourne from which no member of any population, whether colored or otherwise, returns.

Sir Felix Schuster, eminent British banker, who is expected to be one of the British deputations to New York on the exchange problem.

A rather turgid orator, noted for his verbosity and heaviness, was once assigned to do some campaigning in a mining camp in the mountains. There were about fifty miners present when he began, but when at the end of a couple of hours he gave no sign of finishing, his listeners one by one dropped away.
