LIQUOR AND DRUGS.

(Moncton Transcript.)

A favorite argument advanced in this country is that the enforcement of prohibition has a tendency to encourage the drug habit. When these critics speak of the drug habit, they ignore that intoxicating liquors themselves are in a sense drugs, which intensify the appetite for this form of drug. Therefore the very argument which they are using for the suppression of the unrestricted sale of habit creating drugs applies with equal force to alcoholic drinks. In England it has been found that the drinking of intoxicating beverages has created an appetite, which craves for something stronger and now that something stronger is being demanded in the objectionable drugs.
