dled their horses at once and started. Albritton was anxious to try his dogs. They were joined by two or three other men, and by daylight reached the place where the hog had been attacked. The grass and underbrush were beaten down and a broad trail ran off through the swamp. The dogs immediately took the track. Barber, being inexperienced, struck out full speed after the animals. The others called him back, but he was after bear and paid no attention. The trail led through underbrush, over fallen logs, and the young hunter stumbled over alligators and disturbed all kinds of water fowl. At times he was compelled to water fowl. At times he was compelled to wade waist-deep in water, as the swamp was wet and boggy. After a couple of hours, the dogs treed their quarry. Barber saw a small cub sitting in the top of a small pine tree, "just like a nigger boy," as he remarked. In another tree a few feet beyond the mother bear stood with her hind feet on one limb and her front paws resting on another limb, contemplating the situation. Taking deliberate aim, he fired both barrels into the bear, and she came tumbling to the ground. He then turned his attention to the cub, but after a short chase the young one escaped, and Barber returned to the place where he had killed the bear. The animal weighed about three hundred pounds.

While hunting hogs one day, young Barber saw a porker tearing swiftly along, and close behind the hog was a large bear.

"And right here," said Mr. Barber, "I want to correct an impression that seems to have prevailed for years. You frequently read or hear of the bear's deadly hug. When he gets into close quarters he rears and makes a grab for his victim, whom he gnaws to death."

When Barber first saw the race he stopped still in his tracks, because the animals were | today and accept no substitute. coming in a bee line toward him. The hog passed him like a whirlwind, the bear lumbering on behind, but gaining steadily. Peruna seeks out catarrh in all the hid- When Bruin went by he spied Barber and

Barber began backing off, the bear following him up. Watching his chance, Barber whirled and darted through the woods. He could hear the bear growling only a few feet in his rear. Presently the pursued felt the hot breath of the pursuer on his back. He kept his eyes cast about for some sort of weapon, and just as Bruin reared on his hind feet to catch him. Barber saw a club a little to one side, which he instantly made

The bear, of course, passed him, but stopped almost instantiy and whirled around to make his charge. Again he reared. His eyes glared ferociously. Barber knew it was to be a life and death struggle, and nerved himself for the shock. It is needless to say that his hair stood on end, because it would be natural for peculiar sensations to chase each other up and down the spinal cord when face to face with a fierce wild animal bent on devouring you. As the animal started to close in, Barber
