The family.

Maggie's Path to Cloudland. Sauntering in the meadow, Peeping o'er the hedge, I spied a little hat, With a broad ragged edge.

Tangled curls beneath it, In many a clustering maze ; And peering bright between them A merry, sunny gaze.

Looking up to heaven, Watching cloudlet white, Moving on so lazily With soft and mellow light.

Maggie's blue eyes gazing, Beautiful to see ; Her fat, brown hands upraising. Her sweet words-" Come to me."

" Come down, little cloudlete. I'll eatch you in the grass ; But now, you're far above me, I have to let you pass."

In her childlike eagerness She sprang upon her feet ; And bounded to the lowland. Where brook and meadow meet.

Singing, all the grassy way, To the clouds above, Begging them to come to her In tones of pleading love.

Suddenly her blue eyes Wandered to the brook

A cry of joy-" They've How aweet and bright they look."

Like a flock of fleecy lambs,

Enticing her along ; They sailed upon the water, With slow and rippling song.

A merry shout of laughter : Sunshine beaming in her face Two bare feet splashing after ;---Clouds and Maggie ran a race.

Childhood rare | childhood sweet ! Finding jove for every day, Where the skies and waters meet. Where bare feet and brooklets play,

Then, lingering in the meadow. Watching Maggie's spree ; I thought, " Were I a child again, My Heaven would come to me."
