POETRY.

Once in a while.
Once in a while the sun shines out,
And the arching skies are a perfect blue.
Once in a while amid clouds of doubt,
Fathoms' latest stars come peeping through.
Our paths lead down by the meadows fair,
Where the sweetest blossoms nod and smile,
And we lay aside our cross of care,
Once in a while.
Once in a while within our own
We feel the heat of a glowing friend,
Once in a while we see
Our lives with the heart's own voice
And the dearest of all our dreams come true,
And on life's way a golden mile,
Each thrilling hour is blessed with new,
Once in a while.
Once in a while in the desert sand
We find a spot of the forest green;
Once in a while from where we stand
The hills of Paradise are seen.
And a perfect joy in our hearts we hold,
A joy that the world can not define,
We taste earth's dross for the purest gold,
Once in a while.

SELECT STORY.

GOOD BYE.
BY JOHN STRANGE WINTER.
CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.
"You thought that I had wronged you," she said softly, "and if I had been what you thought you would have been justified in every word that you said, in everything that you did."
"Oh! no," he cried sharply. "I was wrong, Hope, wrong, all wrong. I never knew the meaning or value of mercy until now—and you—your merciful excuse hurts me more than all the reproaches in the world would do."
"I didn't mean it," she said simply. "It is all hard and cruel enough without my making it worse now. But Dick, you haven't told me yet what it is you have heard."
He could not tell it any longer, so he gave her the paper which Trevor had brought him and stood watching her as she read it. She showed no surprise, but quietly folded the paper and looked at him enquiringly.
"I have already set the police to trace out Rosalie Vallin," he said. "You will not find her," she answered quietly.
"Because she is dead."
"How do you know?"
She did not speak for a moment. She seemed to be going back over the past, and she signed her eye broke the silence.
"Rosalie died nearly two years ago—she died here."
"In this house?" Adair cried incredulously.
"In this house," she said quietly—"and with her head in mine."
"And she confessed?"
"Everything."
"You have it in writing?"
"Yes, the doctor witnessed it."
"You ought to have had a magistrate."
"I had—he is a justice for his own county—Dr. Langdon came up to give an opinion on her case and he heard her statement and put it all correctly and formally down. I have it now."
"And you have had the power to prove your innocences for two years and you never used it. You never told me," he cried with deepest reproach—"you left me in the dark all this time. Oh! Hope."
She raised her serene and dove-like eyes to his. "You forget, Dick," she said, "that I know nothing of your life, of your circumstances, except such as the merest outsider could know. I knew that you were married—that with a scarcely perceptible quiver of her lips—"that you had married Flossie Tempest. How was I to know whether you cared if I was innocent or guilty? For any knowledge I had, you might have been as happy or more happy with her than you were with me. I—I had no grudge against her, and what was done could not be undone. If I had told you all this two years ago, it would have made her, and perhaps you too, wretched, but nothing could have given me back my happy past. So what was the good of speaking?"
But your name—that could have been cleared," he cried.
A faint smile crossed her lips. "Oh!

I am 71 years of age, been afflicted with sick headache all my life, which developed into dyspepsia of a mild type about twenty years ago, and has continued to grow until during the past seven or eight years I have not been able to take any food or water, as they produce severe pains and vomiting. I have been subject to pains in the chest, with dizziness, have been more frequent during the last three or four years. My mouth turned up in the morning, accompanied with bad breath. My case was growing worse.
