Selected Literature.

Harry Heathcote of Gangolli.

BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

Just a fortnight before Christmas, 1871, a young man, twenty-four years of age, returned home to his dinner about eight o'clock in the evening.

He was married, and with him and his wife lived his wife's sister. At that somewhat late hour he walked in among the two young women, another much older woman, who was preparing the table for dinner. The wife and the wife's sister each had a child in her lap, the elder having seen some fifteen months of its existence, and the younger three months.

"He has been out since seven, and I don't think he's had a mouthful," the wife had just said. "In the name of charity give me a nobbler. I did get a bit of damper and a pannikin of tea up at the German's but; but I never was so hot or so thirsty in my life—We're going to have it in earnest this time. Old Bates says that when the gun leaves crackle, as they do now, before Christmas, there won't be a blade of grass by the end of February."

"I hate Old Bates," said the wife.
"He always prophesies evil, and complains about his rations."

"He knows more about sheep than any man this side of the Mary," said her husband. From all this the reader will understand that the Christmas to which he is introduced is not the Christmas with which he is intimate on this side of the equator—a Christmas of blazing fires in-doors, and of sleet and snow and frost outside—but the Christmas of Australia, in which happy land the Christmas fires are apt to be lighted—or to light themselves—when they are by no means needed.

The young man who returned home had on a flannel shirt, a pair of mousseline trousers, an old straw hat, hattered nearly out of all shape. He had no coat, no waistcoat, no braces, and nothing around his neck. Round his waist there was a strap or belt, from the front of which hung a small pouch and, behind, a knife in a case. And stuck into a loop in the belt, made for the purpose, there was a small brierwood pipe. As he dashed his hat off, wiped his brow, and threw himself into a rocking chair, he certainly appeared rough to look at, but by all who understood Australian life he would have been taken to be a gentleman.

He was a young squatter, well-known west of the Mary River, in Queensland. Harry Heathcote of Gangolli, who owned 30,000 sheep of his own, was a magistrate in those parts, and able to hold his own among his neighbors, whether rough or gentle; and some neighbors he had, very rough, who made it almost necessary that a man should be able to be rough also, on occasions, if he desired to live among them without injury. Heathcote of Gangolli could do all that. Men said of him that he was too imperious, too masterful, too much inclined to think that all things should be made to go as he would have them. Young as he was, he had been altogether his own master since he was of age—and not only his own master, but the master also of all with whom he was brought into contact from day to day.

In his life he conformed but seldom with any but those who were dependent on him, nor had he done so for the last three years. At an age at which young men at home are still subject to pastors and masters, he had sprung at once into patriarchal power, and being a man determined to thrive, had become laborious and thoughtful beyond his years.

Harry Heathcote had been left an orphan with a small fortune in money when he was fourteen. For two years after that he conformed to the quiet life of a school, but at sixteen he declared his purpose of emigrating.
Boys less than himself in stature above him at school, and he had been opposed by his guardian, but at the end of the year he was fitted for the colony. The guardian was obliged to be quiet of him, and he would be home again.
