Adam Graeme, of Mossgray.

"Did you ever hear of this place, Halbert?" said Lilias, as they stood beside the great window in the gable, looking into a large, faded, melancholy room, which bore vident marks of care and order, solitary and desolate though it was.

Halbert looked a little astonished.
"I have never before been at Mossgray," be answered, "and at home—I mean in the North—these border counties were very Androdes to us."

Lilias did not answer; she looked thorace, lihiking of Lucy Murray in her solitude, and of Oharlie Graeme the household traitor, whose houses, fresh, ingenuous son had never heard of Murrayshaugh.

The faint sound of a lifted latch aroused her attention and she looked round. A little old woman, with impatient, vivacious features and quick pattering steps, came along the grass-grown path. The had heard voices without, and had issued forth in evident wrath to avenge the intrusion on her territory.
"Oh, mem, I beg your pardon!" she ex-

"Oh, mem, I beg your pardon!" she exstaimed, as she made a dead stop in front of Lilias.

"If I dinns think it was Robbie Carlyle's ouddie and that tinker of a callant Peter chasing him! but ye'll be the young lady of Mossgray?"

Lilias took the designation with a smile.

"This is Murrayshaugh, is it not?" she asked.

Right actions spring from right principles. In cases of diarrhea, dyseniery, cramps, and were looking at some pictures on the wall. Before the first of these, that of a young man in an antipe dress, evidently an old family portrait, Lilias paused with a syndem start. There was a vive color and surprised animation on her face, such as Habbert had never seen her have before, and the tone of her voice struck him as she turned to ask about the picture—low, full and musical, as if the heart throbbed through it more warmly than was its wont. "It's ance o' the auld Murrays—I dimamind his name," said Isabel; "but Miss Lucy had a conceit that it was like Mr. Hew. They were a' like ither; the same voice came down, like the name, frace faither to son. Thao ane was a How too, I dimadoubt; it's a guid name; they man a' have been fend o't."

shaped fields, "three neukit," as Saunders calls them, with quite a super-abundance of hedges. I should like to sweep those encumbrances away, and brig; them into better working order. Will you come and see them, Mossgray;"

"Halbert, my man," said Mossgray, smiling, "I am too old to learn—even your training will scarcely make a good farmer of me, I am afraid; and I give you full discretion, you know."

I am afraid, and I give you full discretion, you know,"
"But Mossgray," persisted Halbert, "I am sure you have no concern for the seturifiless hedges; and good agriculture—"
"Is a very necessary, noble, and honorable att," said the laird," berfectly so, Halbert; and I am by no means a sentimental admirer of thriftless hedges; but I am old, you know, and not a good judge; you must take it into your own hands."
Halbert was not quite satisfied.
"Stil, Mossgray, if you are not engared—"
The good Messgray could not deny the youth his request.

Halbert was not quite satisfied.

"Stil, Mossgray, if you are not engaced—"

The good Mossgray could not deny the youth his request.

"Well, Halbert, if it must be. Come then, let us see about this business of yours."

Halbert was very full of undertaking. He began to tell Mossgray what his crops were to be, and the measures he would take with obstinate land, which was not naturally obedient to the discipline of the plow. The country looked very cheerful as they passed on. Round about, skirting the horizon on every side, where ranges of low hills, some rich with fir trees and softer young spring ioliage to the very top, white far-seen lines, lost themselves among the hills, and through the trees, which divided their path from the river, glinpses of the wan water, flowing on full and broad to the sea, glimmered through the soft, gay, fluttering leaves of spring. Turning back on the sievation which they had reached, the full fir h, quigering like molten sliver, stretched between them and the clear creeks and villages of the English shore, over whose stillness muffled mountains watched in the background; and icoming out against the pale sky in the West, his b oad sides darkened here and there, as if with stationary shadows; rose the bluff Scottish hill, whose strong brow every night was crowned with the glory of the sunset. There was a hum of voices in the pleasant air, and plows were turning up the rich, dark, iragant earth, and the "tentie seedsman" staked about the fields. The sky and the leaves were soft and fresh, so fresh and soft as they only are in the early year, and the refreshed land seemed to open its moist breast with gladness to the kindly processes of spring.

In Camden the other night, says the Boston Globe, a policeman saw on the street a woman attired in a wrapper with hair hanging loosely down her back. She was walking slowly and when the officer approached her side he was astonished to hear her snoring, although her eyes were open. He addressed her in low tones, but received no answer. He then grabbed her by the arm. This roused her. When she was found by the officer she was nearly two miles from her home.

Among the pains and aches cured with marvelous rapidity with Dr. Thomas Eclectric Oil, is ear ache. The young are especially subject to it, and the desirability of this Oil as a family remedy is enhanced by the fact that it is admirably adapted not only to the above aliment, but also to the hurts, disorders of the bowels, and affections of the throat, in which the young are specially subject.

—An American paper says the natural tendency of cheap prices for goods is lower wages for labor. The declaration seems a reasonable one; and if true, the farming community is interested in having the workingmen in towns and cities, who consume three-fourths of the products of the farm, receive higher instead of lower wages.
