The animal then proceeded to the guest of the house, attempted to swerve the animal from the court. He was knocked down and had several ribs broken and was otherwise injured

The beast crashed through the door, walked through the barber shop and out on the main street, crossed the street and crashed through the heavy plate glass window in a store. Before being rounded up at a down-town public stable the animal trampled on another man and seriously gored him with his tusks.

One of the keepers attempted to subdue the animal, but was hurled over a high fence, sustaining painful injuries. Not until four other elephants were brought to the stable was the huge beast got under control and taken to the circus grounds.

By this time the entire town was in an uproar. The women of the east side were afraid to venture into the streets, fearing that the herd had not been captured.

Two years ago Vivillo, having made a fortune, sought to change his profession. Many witticisms were passed on the fact that he set himself up as a hotelkeeper. It was intimated that he had merely changed his methods of separating travelers from their superfluous cash. He also owned several farms, whither he repaired in times of leisure, devoting himself to the education of his children. He then lived under an assumed name, and his neighbors never suspected who he was. Vivillo had disappeared.

In the meantime the band, which he had once controlled and with which he still maintained relations carried on business much in the old way.
