Dr. J. S. Helmeken Tells of This Sailor of By-Gone Days.

Cadboro Bay and the Little English Place Whose Name It

The reference in vesterday morning's Colonist to Brotchie's Ledge has proved of considerable interest. Dr. J. S. Helmeken has handed in the following in regard to the ancient mariner whose name the grave of the San Pedro bears:

"In 1850 I saw Capt. Brotchie at Fort Rupert. He had been to England, obtained a ship, sailed for Dungeness This ship was seized by the customs authorities on account of informalities about entering and so forth, and forfeited. At this time, of course, the country was unsettled and in a sort of chaos and but little justice to be had, only spoils. He went to Fort Rupert, where he had plenty spars on the beach, many more than one hundred feet in length without knot or blemish, but no ship came to take them swav—iron had come came to take them away—iron had come more into use and Her Majesty no longer wanted these wooden masts and spars. He left Fort Rupert for Victoria, where I think among other things he became harbor master. Of course he died, leaving

At Fort Rupert he wanted to build a boat, had to devise a steam chest for bending the plank and to use anything he could find, old gun barrels, etc., etc., for in those days little could be had at the Fort. The wood had to be sawn. The Indians puzz'ed, watched Brotchie's conjurations. At length the steam was for in those days little could be had at the Fort. The wood had to be sawn. This ship was seized by the customs congregation on Sunday last, the church being crowded at both the mornbeing crowded at both the morning and the evening service and many remaining to clasp the hand of the retiring clergyman and wish him health, happiness and success in his new field of labor. At the close of his evening discourse the reverend gentleman took formal leave of the city of Victoria, speaking in hearty appreciation of the many kindnesses extended to him by all with whom he had come in contact during his residence here, and bespeaking for his successor, Rev. Mr. Speer, the cordial co-operation, which is the older centres of civilization has proved such a monumental success in the adelioration of the condition of the laboring classes, is the primum mobile of the present undertaking of which the new departure at the Cormorant street building is the outward and visible sign to the eyes of Victorians. Although fruits will probably cut by far the larger figure in the operations of the Association, it is the intention to handle all kinds of farm produce—potatoes, eggs, butter, etc. In fact a start has already been made in the sale of the latter commodity, the first consignment having been received last Saturday, and of course found ready sale. And in this connection the manager states that although not properly equipped in that respect, still it is his intention to deliver purchases to all regular customers, and as soon as the refrigerator is installed, which will be in a day or two, the amount cers and others, as a trade discount of 20 per cent. will be allowed, and an endea-vor will be made to have local dealers send their orders for their requirements
