GOODS TAKE ELEVEN DAYS

TO COME FROM LIVERPOOL BY THE CANADIAN ROUTE.

Figures Showing that the Canadian Route is the Shortest—No Outside Quotations on Account of Election—The Oil Report—Commercial Miscellany.

In consequence of the Presidential election there were no outside quotations on the Board of Trade yesterday with the exception of Bate-bolm's. As a result business was slack.

In support of the contention that goods sent by the Canadian route from Europe arrive as quickly as by the United States route, The World gives the following statement of the sailings during the past summer of the Dominion Line steamships from Liverpool:

	Liverpool.	Quebec.	Toronto.	Transit.
Vancouver	April 19	May 1	May 4	15 days.
Sarnia	" 27	" 10	" 12	15 "
Vancouver	" 24	June 6	June 7	14 "
Sarnia	June 6	" 20	" 21	15 "
Oregon	" 14	" 24	" 26	12 "
Vancouver	" 26	July 4	July 5	11 "
Sarnia	July 13	" 20	" 23	12 "
Oregon	" 19	....	....	....
Vancouver	Aug. 11	Aug. 17	Aug. 18	13 "
Sarnia	" 17	" 27	" 30	15 "
Oregon	" 30	Sept. 7	Sept. 8	12 "
Vancouver	Sept. 8	" 18	" 19	13 "
Sarnia	" 22	Oct. 1	Oct. 4	15 "
Oregon	" 29	....	....	....
Vancouver	Oct. 11	Oct. 20	Oct. 22	12 "
Sarnia	" 20	....	....	....
Oregon	Nov. 3	....	....	....

The length of time that shipments per New York are in transit is from 13 to 15 days, the usual time being 13 days. The World cannot procure a statement for the United States route, but wholesale men say that 15 days is the time allowed. The Canadian route is, therefore, on an average a day faster. If Canadians will look into this matter they will find that by developing the Canadian route they will be hastening their shipments.

Commercial Miscellany.

According to The Wall-street News the rate per ton, par value, on the Manitoba Railroad in 1879 was 14 per cent., in 1880 it was $200, 1881, $300. While Montreal shipped about 70,000 boxes of cheese for the week ending Oct. 27, New York had to content itself with about 7000 boxes.

From 180,000,000 to 200,000,000 feet of timber from the Ottawa Valley, Ont., are annually shipped to South America, West Indies, Australia and the Cape of Good Hope. It is claimed that cost from $14 to $18 sell for from $25 to $30 at Rio Janeiro or La Plata, and at from 25 to 30 in the Antipodes.

The ruling prices of apples at Liverpool have been fairly steady, considering that the early fruit does not usually ship in very good condition. Fine shippers are easily sold at 12s to 15s per barrel, but the bulk of the receipts are poor, and the market is very weak. Prices nominally are 6s to 12s for the early arp, they will be disappointed with the results.

The G. T. R. Company's new native proposed to lease from the Ontario and Quebec Railroad Company its extensions from London, Canada, to a point on Lake Erie. One Soul in the Grave.
How many are near us, even of our own poor flesh and blood, whose tottering step, pallid face, unnatural glitter of the eye and hacking cough, and its accompanying nervous prostration of the head over the range, forecast of the dread disease—consumption—as surely as the rumble of the coming car announces its approach? Such symptoms as these and in the incipient stage of such unfortunates this is pointed, to assure them that their cases need tend no longer toward that narrow receptacle that awaits all—but is, until life's allotted space is covered—from my long experience in the scientific researches of Golden Medical Discovery, have wrested from Nature a remedy which never fails to cure the disease in all of its earlier forms (which is easily nothing more nor less than scrofula of the lungs), if taken in time. Druggists sell it. 26

IN GREAT LUCK.

BY A SECRET SERVICE DETECTIVE.

In the spring of 1863 every denomination of "shinplaster" currency had been counterfeited and circulated, and every issue of greenbacks, from the dollar bill to the twenty, had been reproduced by the "queer" men. Counterfeiting flourished as never before nor since. Anything that looked like money would go, especially in the country towns.

The gang which was working the $1 and $2 plates was located at Sandusky, but we did not get this pointer until they had floated out a good many thousand dollars. The case was assigned to me, and I proceeded to Sandusky in the guise of an army contractor. I had no details whatever, but by keeping my eyes open and picking up a note here and there I satisfied myself that our information was correct. Then I selected the most popular drug store in the place, told the proprietor my business, and arranged to make a capture. Men "stewing the juice" will call at a drug store sooner than any other place of business, because they can purchase from such a variety, and can carry the purchase away in the pocket. This druggist had been bitten several times, and was anxious to help me to some one. I felt that it was only a question of time when some of the operators would be offered again, and I was right. On the third day after I took up my station in the store a respectable-looking middle-aged man rushed in, holding his hand to his cheek and exclaimed:

"For Heaven's sake give me something for the toothache! I am almost crazy!"

The clerk hurried to put up something, the stranger paced around and groaned and moaned, and when he received the bottle he handed out a $10 bill and said:

"Quick—I've got to catch the train!"

The clerk glanced at the bill and began to make change, but stopped to take a second look at it. I started forward, but before I had taken five steps the man was off like a flash. I pursued, but he dodged me in the crowd. I went back and looked at the bill, and lo! it was a counterfeit, not that it looked like the genuine as to deceive almost any one except a cashier. For the next three days I did some tall hustling, and the result was to drive the gang out of Sandusky without having the luck to arrest anybody. Three were four of them, and they had a fob office which turned out work for the public. The fellows had put out at least $30,000 in the west, having several plates of different denominations, and the worst of it was they got off with the plates.

Almost purely by accident I learned that one of the gang had a brother living near Rocky River, a few miles out of Cleveland, and it was possible he might go into hiding there for a time. As this was the only twist I had, I determined to look the ground over. Going up to Cleveland, I got a horse and buggy for a country drive and started for Rocky River. I was only well clear of the city when I saw a heavy thunderstorm coming up and had to look for shelter. I had to drive a couple of miles to find it. It was an old barn on the river end of a farm. It was in a tumble-down condition, but there was a shed under which I could put the horse. I was only two minutes ahead of a storm which raged for an hour and a half. I found a corner of the barn which did not leak, and for the first half hour I scarcely looked around me. When I did come to it so the interior, about the first thing I saw was a paper package resting on a beam running across the barn. It could not have been seen from any other position in the barn, and I may say it was the queer sound given out by the drops of water as they fell on the paper which caused me to look up.

I had the package down after a dirty climb, and as I opened it out fell the plates of the counterfeits used at Sandusky—every one of them. There were plates for a $1, $2, $5, and a $10 bill, and for ten, twenty-five and fifty cent shinplasters, and the ink from the last impressions had not been entirely cleaned off. While I was swelling with the importance of my discovery the storm passed over, and while engaged in doing up the package a buggy stopped at the gap in the highway fence and one of the two men in it jumped down and came running into the barn. He did me see me at first, but started to climb up after the package on the beam. I knew then that he was one of the gang, and I grabbed him. He was a stout fellow, and we had a savage tussle for it, but I finally got the irons on his wrists and made him prisoner. As soon as I seized him he shouted to me to make no noise, and before our struggle ended the man was a mile away. The one I caught was Sam Dixon, a "queer man" of note, and known to me as "number six." He got $20 in jail. He was the chap who counterfeited the Brazilian currency, and got rid of $30,000 worth before any row was raised. He kept a close mouth and would not peach on any of the gang. Even when he got his sentence, which was for twelve years, he calmly remarked:

"Well, business will go on at the old stand just the same."

W. N. Learn, of Westminster, the well-known cheeseman, says: "I have suffered for the past eighteen months with catarrh, or what I thought was ivy poison. I paid out $130 to doctors and used $10 worth of Quticura remedy without receiving any benefit. By this time my whole system was poisoned and my head was in a very bad condition. I offered one of the leading physicians of London a horse worth $150 to cure me, and he would not undertake it. On the last day of the London Fair I called at the Totem of Health office, 208 Dundas-street, and purchased a $1.00 box of Medical Lake Salts, and one dollar bottle of Concentrated Waters, and in fourteen days I was entirely cured. I have made this statement, and authorize Mr. Holland to refer to me thereby to benefit others." Sold wholesale and retail, 20 Arcade, Yonge-street. 24

A WOMAN'S RUSE.

Or How Herself Shone.

I little thought when I parted on that little French seaport town to relish some marine studies that I should lose my heart there. Rosine was not only a pretty girl, but she had a refined manner, and I could hardly believe that the old peasant woman she lived with was indeed a relative.

I am afraid I made little progress in the art after I made Rosine's acquaintance, for I much preferred to make love to her than paint fishing smacks.

I was reminded of my other duties in life when I returned to my studio one day and found my father awaiting me. He remarked as he looked over my paintings that I seemed to be working very slow. I said the weather had been too disagreeable to paint outdoors, and he seemed satisfied with the excuse.

When I told me the object of his visit I was considerably taken. In true French fashion, without asking my consent, he had made arrangements for me to marry the daughter of an old friend of his. The young lady was represented as heiress, and I was a lucky man to get her.

Marriages are arranged by the parents in France. What could I say? I had not at that moment the courage to say:

"I love the humble girl of poor old peasant women, and live in a little cottage." Perhaps it was cowardly, but to avoid explanations for the present I agreed to return to Paris with my father early the next morning.

After an earnest talk down again he did Rosine, little suspecting, and pleading through the window, saw both women together pending over some object, at which they were looking by the light of the shaded lamp. It was a beautiful picture—the old brown face set off by its high white cap, long golden earrings, and bright blue kerchief; the young one fair, rosy, soft, and all in purest white. Rosine dressed like a Parisian.

"Come out, Rosine," I whispered through the blinds. "I have a confession to make to something." I, whispered, as I led her away from the door. "I am going to Paris to-morrow. My father will have it so. He has chosen a wife for me—some rich lady whom I am told to marry for her money. And I am ordered to show myself to her."

"Then good-by, Monsieur," said Rosine, holding out her hand. "We shall not see you at—again."

"Rosine," I said, "you must hear me out. I am not going to marry this heiress. I hate her!"

"Poor heiress! What has she done?" asked Rosine.

"Nothing," I said. "Probably she also hates me. But I will not have her; I will marry a girl I love or none. Rosine, when I come back will you marry me? I shall be very poor, for my father will not help me if I disobey him; but we will live here on bread and salad. I will paint grass pictures, and grow rich and famous. You will not be afraid—you, a peasant's daughter. Will you have me?"

Rosine looked at me. After a while she put her hands in mine.

"If you come back and ask me to," she answered.

"I swear it," I said. "I plight my faith to you before God."

I took from my little finger, as I spoke, a curious old ring I wore and slipped it on her fore-finger.

"It is my betrothal ring," said I.

Then I kissed her and we parted.

At dawn I went to Paris with my father. I had determined on my course, but I delayed the confession. Of course, I did not intend to present myself before Mlle. Monterpan that would have been ungentlemanly; but before I had been in the city twenty-four hours I found myself in a position from which I would have given thousands to extricate myself.

My father and myself were in a cafe, when suddenly a gentleman stood before us, offering us his hands. It was Monsieur Monterpan.

"Ah—how are you?" he cried. "I have just been to the train to receive my daughter, whose old nurse has just brought her home from the seaside. They are taking coffee just beyond there—no time like the present for introducing the young people."

I turned pale—my knees knocked together. Once introduced in this way to Mlle. Monterpan I should be considered a coward and a rascal to retreat from the engagement. Yet I must do so.

"Very well," I said to myself. "No doubt M. Monterpan will challenge me—probably kill me. Very well; it is fate."

"How bashful he is," whispered M. Monterpan in my father's ear as he led the way.

We crossed the cafe. At a table sat a young lady dressed in exquisite style, and an old woman in a servant's cap. Their backs were toward us. M. Monterpan approached.

"Rosine, my dear," he said, "here is my old friend, Monsieur Barnin, whom you know, and his son, Monsieur Henri, whom as yet you do not know."

Rosine! What a coincidence! I stood staring at the young lady as she rose, turned and bowed to us. I was incapable of any word or motion, for the likeness was astounding.

Rosine! Yes! And this old woman—was Mamzelle, in another cap!

I managed to bow and bowed sweetly. I managed to bow and mutter something.

Mamzelle's old black eyes laughed, while her mouth was held close shut.

"No, Monsieur Henri; I never told you that I was Mamzelle's niece," said Rosine, a little while after. "She was my nurse, and I go every Summer to visit her at her cottage. We knew who you were, and what our parents intended, and it pleased me to be courted"— is not that what they call it?—like an American girl. Oh, how shocked Mamzelle was at my conduct."

This was aside. The two then drank their wine together, and whispered:

"How soon they have taken to each other."

And Rosine and I are to be married in September.

FOR OLD PEOPLE!

In old people the nervous system is weakened, and that must be strengthened. One of the most prominent medical writers of the day, in speaking of the prevalence of rheumatic troubles among the aged, says: "The various pains, rheumatic or other, which old people often complain of, and which materially disturb their comfort, result from disordered nerves." There it is in a nutshell—the medicine for old people must be a nerve tonic. Old people are beset with constipation, flatulency, drowsiness, dizziness, indigestion, rheumatism, neuralgia.

These diseases are of nervous origin. Paine's Celery Compound, that great nerve tonic, is almost a specific in these disorders, and by its regulating influence on the liver, bowels, and kidneys, removes the disorders peculiar to old age. Old people find it stimulating to the vital powers, productive of appetite, and a promoter of digestion.

Sold by druggists. $1.00. Six for $5.00. Send for eight-page paper, with many testimonials from nervous, debilitated, and aged people, who bless Paine's Celery Compound.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING
EPPS'S COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, by grocers, labelled thus:
