UNDERDRAINAGE

We already know the advantages to be gained by underdrainage. Now the question evolves down to the point of locating the drains. The observing farmer or cultivator who has acquainted himself with his fields during his labor upon them through successive seasons will have noted the location of parts on which excessive water at certain times occasioned a partial or total failure of crops. Knowledge of this nature is of first importance in the location of a system of drains that shall relieve his land of all excessive water.

In addition, the farmer who has familiarized himself through his field operations with the composition, structure, texture and drainage properties of the soil and subsoil of his land, has acquired data of utmost value as a preliminary to the proper placing of his drain.

With this information the farmer should apply to the Agricultural Representative for the county to have a drainage survey made of his farm. If it can possibly be arranged, the work will be done from the staff at his office free of charge; but if time does not permit a qualified man will be secured from the Drainage Department of the Ontario Agricultural College to do the work. The expense to be borne by the farmer will be a porportion of his railway expenses divided between the number of parties who are having drainage surveys made.

When a drainage engineer makes a thorough survey of the farm, the elevation of the land is taken at the corners of every one hundred square feet. This enables the general contour of the ground to be shown on the map, and the direction and course of each drain is plainly marked as well as the grade of drain and the number and size of tile. In addition to the use of the knowledge acquired relative to the situation, the exercise of discretion and good judgment is imperative. Previous experience is, of course, a valuable aid here but thought and painstaking in the application of the data secured will in a good measure compensate for its lack.

The entire system should be decided upon at this time and recorded so that to the work now done, other portions can be added later and when all are finished a complete, well-arranged drainage system will be in operation.

The sketch map places the facts which have a bearing upon the location before the eye in a collective form so that the topography of the entire field can be seen at a glance.

Willie, the three-year-old son of Chas. Burt, Dunwich-Aldborough townline, attempted to climb onto the hay rack for a ride to the field. The horses started and he fell to the ground when a wheel passed over his leg, breaking it in two places, besides inflicting internal injuries.
