BY WILLIAM C. BRYANT Tis said when Schillers death drew nigh,

The wish possessed his mighty mind, To wander forth wherever lie The homes and haun's of human kind.

Then strayed the poet, in his dreams, By Rome and Egypt's accient graves ; Went up the New World's forest streams, od in the flinduo's temple-caves.

Walked with the Pawnee, ferce and stark, The bearded Tartar, midst his brods, The puby Chinese, and the dark False Malay, uttering gentie words.

How could be rest? even then he trod The threshold of the world unknown; Already, from the seat of Gud, A ray upon his garments shone ;--

Shone and awoke that strong desire For love and knowledge reached not here, ill death set free his soul of fire, To plunge into its fitting sphere.

Then - who shall tell how deep, how bright, The aby as of glary opened round ? How thought and feeling flowed like light, Through fanks of being without bound ?
