Toronto, Nov. 2.—At yesterday morning's session of the prohibition commission Rev. Canon Dumoulin gave evidence, and his very decided antagonism to prohibition created a mild sensation. He did not believe it was either a wise or a workable law, and declared that such a law had no divine sanction. The principle of forcibly restraining a man's actions were utterly repellent to the idea of his free agency, unless he were criminal or insane. Moral suasion must be used instead, and the individual influenced and not compelled. He would favor the freer sales of light wines and beers and the discontinuence as much as possible of spirits. He had seen the crowds in German beer gardens and they were as well behaved and courteous as any he ever met. In preference to prohibition be result bear will be a server and the discontinuous as any he ever met. as any he ever met. In preference to pro-hibition he would have high license, and if prohibition was enacted the brewers certain-ly should be compensated.
