True Irishmen and Irish Americans, says Peter McCorry in the Trish American Weekly, always relish a good story of o'Connell. I think I can tell them an interesting one: It was in the early someour of 1843, if memory serves aright, storaly Cear of the state was propitious to repocket what appeared to be an India si'k pocket handkerchief and wiped his great deam the promise.

There were no railroads in those days a massive forchead.

c maeeting Dublin with the "Athens of Ireland"—a name bestowed by Lady manufacture?" asked a voice from the Mergan densively on Belfast-and so crowd. Mergan densively on Berlast—and so of anell posted the entire distance. As going proached Hilsberough, the seat of first powershire family distance ten miles from Belfast, he alighted from his carriage and dismissed the driver. This was a sturday, two days before the public appointed time of his arrival. For each was necessary in order to deceive the Grangement around Lisburn and Branchedge, who had threatened O'Control of the carried out in his rich Kerry brogue—and the man that wears it is of Irish manufacture."

Women screamed, these was didn't fainted by the the Aire windows of the ground floor acred to within four feet of the chapel and, and with a single impulse the ned windows smashed by strong men, and women and old men were literally errors through them. There were some fitty persons in the gallery, and when tracse heard the breaking of glass to be reved it was an attack by Orangemen. Out of the gallery they could not get set hey jumped over the pews to the feed, and with their bayonets in their to carriery dropped down by the pillars to the ground thor. Here they were shaply wedged in by the great crowd, unat the move. The c'erk in the sanetuas dashed into the vertry rooms, the buly ceased singing, the great organ stopped, and nothing but moans and go are were heard affaround. The ground bed was one large, open space, only about a dozen news on either side of the cor, and this space was packed by a Sold mass of men. The priest on the thar was pale as a corpse—he never moved, and the sexton was speedily at hand to supply the place of the runawity altar mays. In less than half an hour things quieted down, and after mass a sermon was preached by Rev. George Croby, nephew of the old primate of that name who was also archbishop of Arm-

The appearance of the ground floor of the church after the disappointed con-gregation had dispersed was a sight. Hats, cloaks, coats, bits of dresses, shoes, stockings, ribbons, hair-pins, beads, prayer-books, pictures, caps, capes, and every conceivable color of clothing and dress lay scattered around and in piles in every corner. Make up your mind not to go another year without having hay caps enough to cover all the hay left in the field over night. Made of good, slout, umble ached cotton cloth, two yards square, they need not cost more than 25 cents each, and if properly cared for will last 20 years, and they will save their cost in one rain, and atmost in protecting the hay from heavy dews. I rainy day gives a good chance to sharpen up old tools, not only those to be used in haying, but the hoes, the cuttivator teeth, spades and axes. Even the carving-knives and jacknives may work better for grinding. As an old mechanic who turned farmer, and made a good one, used to say, "A keen edge and a well oiled geating makes a machine run easily."

The farmers are jubilant over the promising outlook of the full wheat erop. The hacvest will be the best in years. Already the binders are at work, and the general report is that the yield will be enormous. One states that fall wheat in many places would yield 41 bushels to the acre. Hay is an enormous crop. Another offer, a surplus quantity of hay at 34 a toxford Tribune.
