

APPENDIX B.

URINALS.

The Dry Earth principle is equally applicable to Urinals, especially for schools and railway stations, and other public places. Self-acting machinery for these urinals is supplied by the Company,* and all offensive smell may be prevented, and a valuable manure manufactured. There are public urinals frequented by 2,000 persons a day, and no one requires to be told of their offensiveness. Yet these places may, by the use of dry earth, be made perfectly inoffensive ; and the value of the manure that is now wasted, but which then would be saved, would be highly remunerative.
