At 5 o'clock a short and varied musical programme was given on the platform erected in front of the House. Suffice it to say that it was under the direction of Rev. Father Maddigan. The programme consisted of several choruses sump by the propagation and the several choruses programme consisted of several choruses sung by the orphans, including sailor choruses entitled the "Pinafore," "Canada" and "Life on the Ocean Wave." Commendable selos were sung by Miss Irene Heffernan, of Guelph, who sang "They Eid Me Home," and in response to an encore gave "Sweet Marie." Miss J. Brown, of Dundas, played the accompaniments. Mr. John J. Costello, of Toronto, sang "I'll Live in the Heart of the Storm," composed by H. C. Rakeman and dedicated to the singer. As an encore "The Skippers of St. Ives" was given.

At half-past 6 o'clock the drawing for the many valuable prizes on which "chances" were sold during the day took place on the platform in front of the House. It was conducted by Messrs. Joseph O'Brien and W. F. Campbell, who gave thorough satisfaction. Little Miss Getta Fahey, of Dundas, drew the tickets from the bag. The following is the re-

Young Scotchman's Body Found Under His Canoe in the Thames—His Sweet-heart Swallows Poison on Learning About it—A Woman Burned to Death in London Township—Blanshard Township in a Ferment Over a Young Farmer's Death.

A London despatch says: The city has been greatly excited over a double tragedy that is attended with both romance and mystery. About three months ago Henry Hubert Thomson, a Scotchman about 30 years of age, came to the city from the Pacific coast, and took up his abode at the Grigg house. fellow, and appeared to be in comfortable circumstanc s. Some time after his arrival he had become acquainted with Miss Belle McKechnie, of London, daughter of the late Donald H. McKechnie, a well known commercial traveller, recently deceased. It was not very long before the fact of their cugagement became known, and it is understood their marriage was to have been solemuized in a few weeks. On Friday afternoon Thomson set out in his canoe as usual, but it appears Miss McKechnie was indisposed and the usual paddle did not take place then. Instead, Thomson pulled the canoe up the bank and returned to The house, spending the evening with his fiancee. All that night and the next day, Saturday, the canoe remained on the bank, some stroller having in the meantime turned the craft upside down to keep the rain out of it. On Saturday Thomson again called om Miss McKechnie and remaiped with her until midnight. That was the last seen of him alive. Next morning about 8 o'clock Mr. Joseph Drake wen't down to the river to bathe. There, in the water uponite Evergreen avone, he saw an upturned canoe with no sign of life visible. Instantly dire bing, Drake waded to the spot, and frighting the canoe, he FOUND THE BODY OF HOMSON, one arm being fastened from a chair. Life was extinct. The body was brought ashore and the authorities were at once notified. The ayful news was also conveyed to Miss McKechnie, and on her hearing it the young lady uttered a piercing scream and almost fell to the floor. Recovering herself, however, she rushed upstairs to her room, prized a small bottle on her dressing table, and before anyone could interfere she had drunk some of the contents. In about a minute she was dead. Doctors were hastily summoned, but she was beyond their aid long before their arrival. The poison taken by her, hydrocyanic acid, is described as the most deadly known.

TWO INQUESTS OPENED.

TWO INQUESTS OPENED. Coroner Flock empanelled two juries and opened-industs. The evidence went to show that Thomson had purchased a bottle of poison, similar to that used by Miss McKechnie, a few days ago. After formal identification of the bodies the inquest was adjourned till Tuesday. It is generally believed that the same drug caused death in both cases, as little or no water was found in Thomson's body. Thomson, it is understood, was a man of considerable wealth, said to have been a member of the Ghasgow firm of Thom-son Bros., steamship owners.

WHO HE WAS. Mr. Henry Thomson was no adventurer, as many though, but was all that he claimed to b. He was the youngest son of Mr. John Thomson, No. 67 Hamilton drive, Hillhead, Glasgow, Scotland, a wealthy shipowner. Two years and Henry and two friends started on a trip around the world, but in the East Indies his friends died of fever. He then spent some time in Auguralia, and sailed for America on purpose, it is said, to renew acquanitance with Miss Me Kechnie, whom he met for yours ago. Intil lately his relatives, had sunpice. Twice he left this city for New York, intending to sail for Glasgow, but lie was so fascinated with Miss McKechnic that he came back each time, on the last occasion leaving his personal effects behind. His family upon hearing this cut off his remittances, and for some weeks he had had to borrow from friends, expecting daily that he would receive a draft from the old country. The non-arrival and the low state of his finances, the pressure of creditors, and the sorrow at the thought of parting with Miss McKechnie are supposed to have preyed on his mind and led to the awful deed. He was an accomplished man, being a registered chemist, a lawyer and a good stenographer. He had promised to settle £2,500 a year on his future wife. Mr. Amos Shirley, the American lawyer of the Thomson firm, has started for the city. The victums will be buried to-gether to-morrow.

Crawford's body was found on the G. T. R. tracks one mile east of Granton on Friday afternoon. It is supposed that death took place Thursday night. The remains bore no marks except that the head was severed from the body. The deceased had evidently suicided by placing his neck on the rails as one of the night trains came along. The rash deed seems to have been the outcome of a love affair. Crawford was enamored of a young lady named Miss. Rateliffe, the daughter of wealthy neighbors of the Crawfords, and it is said that for a time his attentions were received by the girl although not favored by the family. A week ago the young folks indulged in a lovers' quarrel, and they did not meet family and they did not meet family. A week ago the young venning, when young Crawford went to the home of his sweetheart to endeavor to straighten out the unpleasantness. He was unsuccessful, however, and was even ordered away from the house by the brothers. This preyed upon his mind as, he left home shortly afterwards. Search was made for him, but without success, until his remains were found on the track, as stated. An inquest will be held.
