out of the tun in order to do it effectually. In the mean time the wine ran out of the tun, without the farmer's ever taking notice of it, till he arrived in town, when he perceived that the vessel was quite empty; he did not however, know how to account for it, not thinking that the ape had played him this trick; but when he came to sell his hog, he found the spigot still sticking fast, where the ape had left it, which so enraged him, that if he had not been afraid of disobliging his landlord, he would have killed him on the spot.

Having disposed of his hog, he went to the gentleman's in order to return him his ape, and beg he would excuse him for not keeping him any longer, on account of the unlucky tricks he was constantly playing. The gentleman concerned to find the ape was so very vicious, was resolved to get rid of it at any rate.

Having caused it to be chained with an iron chain in his apartment, in order to prevent its doing any mischief, he happened soon after to be seized with a cholic, which tormented him very much; he therefore sent for a physician, who caused a medicine to be prepared for him and ordered the apothecary to carry it to him next morning. The apothecary did as he was commanded; but having found the gentleman asleep, he did not care to awake him, but left the medicine in a silver cup upon the ta-
