World Admires Bravery Shown By The Wife Of President

TRIBUTES TO MEMORY OF DEAD PRESIDENT SENT TO WASHINGTON

Among the common folk everywhere the truth carried a sense of personal loss. The tiny man, who for two years had been the life of the White House, had come to be looked upon with very friendly eyes. He was a man who had moved about the city with a step that was light and firm, and who had been seen in the streets and public places. To the very few in high official life who were in Washington when the news brought the ill-tidings over the country, the shock came with a force that was strangely scattered. It was a word that of their leader's death. Of all the cabinet, Postmaster-General New was the only one who was not in the capital. Secretary Hughes, the only other cabinet official within more than a day's journey, was at his summer residence in Maryland, a score of miles away.

Coolidge Is President.
At the request of President Harding, the man on whose shoulders destiny has flung the mantle of high authority, Calvin Coolidge, also has been a member of the cabinet. He has been in the White House cabinet room ever since the inauguration. This knowledge of the national and international affairs where they dropped so suddenly from the lifeless hand of his predecessor.

Official word of Mr. Harding's death came in a message from Attorney General Clegg to Secretary Hughes. The message stated that President Harding had died of cerebral hemorrhage at 9:10 a.m. on August 2, 1923. SKETCH OF NEW PRESIDENT

Calvin Coolidge, who becomes the new President, although by profession a lawyer, entered the public service almost immediately upon leaving college.

First elected a member of the City Council of Northampton, Mass., the city which had been his home since he was a voter, he progressed steadily upward through the offices of city solicitor, Mayor, membership in the House of Representatives and of the Senate of Massachusetts, serving as president of the latter body, and then as a Lieutenant-Governor until elected Governor and in 1920 Vice-President of the United States.

In the more than 20 years he gave to these duties his time was almost exclusively devoted to the problems of public affairs. Only incidentally did he turn to the law, although he always maintained an office with an associate at Northampton.

He was born in the village of Plymouth, N. H., on July 4, 1892, of Puritan ancestry. He came to this country and settled in Northampton, Mass., in 1890.

He left the farm in 1897 for Amherst College and graduated with honors in 1905. Immediately upon leaving college he went to Northampton to study law and finally settled there.

It was Mr. Coolidge's common sense, his insight into legislative tactics and his mental alertness which first attracted to him the attention of political leaders. The late Senator W. Murray, of Vermont, who was a resident of Coolidge's community, was a resident of Coolidge's community.

Mr. Harding preferred the role of counsellor rather than dictator, he speedily removed any doubt that his gift of patience and his sense of humor were not heeded. His purpose once he had charted a course. He told Congress that soldiers' bonus legislation either should carry the means of financing or be postponed, and when the legislators put aside his advice he promptly vetoed the bill they sent him.

An Economical Man.
His tenacity of purpose was further exemplified in his continual pounding for economy in public expenditures and in his insistence that Congress pass the merchant marine bill with a view to curtailing the continual drain on the Treasury as to the form commercial fleet had become upon the Treasury. His greatest single effort in the field of domestic legislation was in 1910 he sought the Governorship of Massachusetts.

Not infrequently Mr. Harding was called upon to play the role of peace-maker in governmental affairs. He intervened in a dispute between Congress and the Treasury as to the form of the important foreign relations committee. From this place he was elevated to the Presidency, the first President to be elected Chief Executive.

Likened to McKinley.
Early in his years of political service he met William McKinley, to whom he was very close. The two men were common to a predominant passion for observation of the House and Senate on the question of American valuation in the tariff law. He proposed in its place a double tariff arrangement under which the Tariff Commission was given authority with its approval to increase or lower rates within prescribed limitations. Upon signing the bill, the President declared that it was the greatest tariff reform in American history.

His Tariff Legislation.
Likewise, his counsel settled the long controversy between the House and Senate on the question of American valuation in the tariff law. He proposed in its place a double tariff arrangement under which the Tariff Commission was given authority with its approval to increase or lower rates within prescribed limitations. Upon signing the bill, the President declared that it was the greatest tariff reform in American history.

PERSONALS

George T. Harding. Like most country boys he went to country school between morning and night chores and later, attended college at Berlin, Ohio. He tried school teaching for a year, but having had a small of printers' ink while sticking type for his college paper, the lure drew him into the newspaper field.

In Newspaper Field.
His family meantime had moved to Marion, in an adjoining county, where he obtained his first newspaper job, and where his life interests were centered thereafter. Mr. Harding's ambition was to become a publisher, and it was realized at the age of 19 when he bid in the Marion Star at a sheriff's sale. The paper was purchased under a heavy mortgage and his friends have often said that the struggles and hardships which were his in making this paper a success had much to do in fashioning his character and developing a broad patience and tolerance.

Whatever his other attainments, Mr. Harding's greatest pride was in his professional accomplishments and training as printer, editor and publisher. Nor did the interests of his profession serve to dull his delight in pottering about a composing room. On his first trip back home after his inauguration, he went to the Star office, pulled off his coat, rolled up his sleeves, borrowed a chew of tobacco and helped "make up" the paper. His high charm was a printer's rule, carried always in a vest pocket.

A Rock-Ribbed Republican.
As his ambition had carried him into the ranks of publishers, so his fancy took him into the realm of politics. From the first he was an ardent partisan, and his insistence upon wearing a "voter pipe" hat, the badge of support of a Democratic newspaper brought him a sharp reprimand from his local party leaders. Marion County then was in the Democratic column and undertook to switch to the Republican party, but his first effort at office on his party ticket resulted in a defeat, though he commanded an unexpected vote.

His First Office.
Mr. Harding's first political office was that of Ohio State Senator, to which he was elected at the age of 24. He served two terms and later was elected Lieutenant-Governor of his state. In 1910 he sought the Governorship of Massachusetts.
