to send them the ADVANCE every week and pay postage on requests for payment and be entirely ignored, without getting out of patience. When those that are now shirking payment had the lawyers after them, and have to pay at the rate of $2 a year, with the costs added, they will wish they had been moderate enough to settle at the rate of $1.50 when they had the opportunity to do so.

Subsequent subscribers are particularly notified that after Jan. 1st, when their accounts are placed out of our hands, they will have to deal with our lawyers, as we do not propose to then interfere with the process of summary collection of the full amounts due, and costs. Every one of them—save those who have other business besides on our books—can inform himself as to what he owes by consulting the pink slip-copy on the top margin of the first page.

at Betler's but did not see him take anything. Do not know whether he took anything, but heard him asked to take something. It was perfectly sober. Had only one drink at Mrs. Hays'. When O'Brien saw many John had, Mr. Hays was slow and in a hurry. I went to Mitchell's because I wanted to see Carroll.

Question.—How was it that Jackson stepped first man and addressed when you wanted to see Carroll?

Answer.—Jackson first spoke to them, asking John to take a drink and said Pat you come too.

Question.—What reply did you make?

Answer.—I told him I did not want to drink with him or speak to him as he had told me.

Question.—Had you a grudge against Jackson?

Answer.—I did not like him.

Question.—Had you not a grudge against Jackson for a couple of years, and did you not take every occasion to bring up the grudge in the prisoner's presence, and did you not threaten you would give him a beating and did you not tell King and others so?

Answer.—I do not remember, but I might have said it to King. I do not know which way Jackson went from Hays' Jackson did not respond abruptly to John when he presented to arrest him. I told Jackson I was cross against him to his him.

Question.—Did you not see your brother Jay hands upon Jackson.

Answer.—He did not know. Jackson had his hands upon my brother. He did not hear Jackson tell John "to be careful" when he came from his mouth. I saw Mrs. Carroll speak to my brother but could not remember what she said or what my brother said to her. He said his brother raise his foot to Jackson. He was a short distance away. Only saw him lift his foot once. Did not see him strike Jackson. After he made the kick he stopped back and dodged behind Mitchell. Mitchell was between the prisoner and deceased when the shot was fired. He had never made this statement of dodging behind Mitchell before.

Question.—Then this was an after thought?

Answer.—Yes. The last time my brother walked towards Mitchell I did not see anything in his hand. Could not swear to anything. My brother was trying to get away from Jackson.

After walking two steps did he not return and face Jackson?

Answer.—No sir.

Question.—Then how did he get shot in the breast?

The shot was fired over Mitchell's shoulder. Henry Mitchell, after giving evidence of the meeting of prisoner and deceased said that on hearing a noise or scuffle between them in the road just opposite his place he ran over, saw prisoner point pistol at deceased and heard shot, the two being about three feet apart. Didn't think the shot was fired over his (witness') shoulder. Prisoner staggered and fell and witness got something for him on the way. He said, "Jackson you've done for me, it will be dreadful news for my poor mother."

In cross-examination witness said he saw no weapon but the revolver. O'Brien might have had one. Didn't see Jackson take off his coat. Witness was with him over together to the house were Mrs. Mitchell, wife of the last witness, testified that just before the shooting, realizing there was trouble between the two men, she ran from her own door to the platform to get her husband. Just as she got outside then heard report and saw flash. Saw only the two men in the immediate vicinity. Did not see her husband there and thought he was mistaken where he was and he was present.

Mathew Carroll, sworn.—He was present on the occasion when the prisoner and deceased met. Deceased and his brother drove up in a wagon and he was on the platform at the house when they arrived. Mitchell was also there in his company. Deceased jumped out of the wagon, came over to Jackson, put his hand on his shoulder and said "you are my prisoner in the Queen's name." Jackson said "all right John, I'll go with you." He then invited Jackson to take a drink and said he came to see him, but I declined. If then told Jackson that he had not acted right with me, as Mr. Barrhill did not want to see me, and that it was not the first time I had had trouble with him. My brother took hold of Jackson and half turned him round on the platform, his pipe fell from his mouth and broke, which made him angry. I then told him how he had served me in serving a capias on me in Chatham some time ago and I wanted to have it out with him and then make up friends with him. My brother said "you're a queer man to do the like of that." Jackson then attempted to hand off his coat to me. Henry Mitchell ordered him away but he said he would not go, he could kick that fellow. I saw my brother move back and kind of dodge when I heard a shot. I saw my brother stagger and then fall. I jumped out of the wagon, went to Mitchell and Jackson were with him. When Mitchell and Jackson were with him, I saw Mitchell and Jackson were with him. When Mitchell and Jackson were with him, I saw Mitchell and Jackson were with him.

On re-examination Mr. Tweedie asked what character John O'Brien bore. Objected to but allowed.

Answer.—He had always heard of O'Brien as a quarrelsome man.

Susan A. Carroll, sworn.—The evidence of this witness testified nothing further than was given by other witnesses.

Dr. Edmund testified as to the cause of death, which was caused by injury inflicted by a bullet, which had entered into a kind of clinch and he, witness, told them not to get into any trouble there. I saw the deceased catch a hold of Jackson and knock the pipe out of his mouth, which fell to the ground, Jackson stooped and picked it up. My wife told Jackson's son to take him away. Jackson then sang out "the could handle that fellow," and was in the act of taking his coat off when he interfered and took his father down the road a piece. That was the last saw.

The Attorney General in cross-examination asked "Do you think any of the whole crowd was sober?"

Answer.—"I know I was sober myself."

On re-examination Mr. Tweedie asked what character John O'Brien bore. Objected to but allowed.

Answer.—He had always heard of O'Brien as a quarrelsome man.

was not a title of evidence of malice aforethought. The prisoner was there attending to his duty as a constable, and was there on his ordinary duties. He first saw the O'Brien at Mrs. Hays', and then saw him strike him. He was on account of an old score two years before. You all know John and Pat O'Brien. Pat O'Brien was wanted to see me as I do, and you know the reputation they all bear. He wished to say no more against the reputation of the deceased. He was necessary in the proper performance of his duty as a constable. They evidently had some quarrel. Jackson when they returned to Carroll's house Pat O'Brien was wanted to see me. How does Jackson reply. It is a quiet manner, and was met by John O'Brien with the threat "I will see you." I thought you had done so to a brother of mine I would kick your face off. The witnesses remembered John O'Brien saying "you're my prisoner," but they heard Jackson saying "I will see you." The pipe fell out of the prisoner's mouth, but evidence showed that it was knocked out of his mouth and again received in his pocket. There is a little evidence of malice? Did he not say "I will see you"? After he was taken to the hospital, he was taken to where they were, and who did he go to raise a fight. He told O'Brien to go home, and so did Carroll, but he re-acted. He would not.

What does Mr. Getchell say? She saw these men coming along quietly, but she saw by the force look on O'Brien's face that there would be trouble.
