In conclusion, the public is reminded that the bill has already passed unaniously in the Maine legislature, "being recognized by all as a measure that will tend to the development of this country." Our Edmundston contemporary is probably hasty in assuming that the Maine legislature was interested in the development of "this" country. The bill does seem to be the advantage of Maine.

terest in this country from his study of the legends and folk lore of the Indians who dwelt upon the Acadian coasts. All the literature in English belonging to the Algonquin traditions and mythology begins with our own Dr. Silas T. Rand. Leland borrowed extensively from Dr. Rand's magazine articles and from his manuscripts before the Wellesley College scholars published the well known edition of the Rand papers. Other writers and explorers have taken up the study since, but Leland's Algonquin Legends gave the first cosmopolitan circulation to our native folk lore. It would appear that while the Indians who dwelt on this corner of the continent were less aggressive and masterful than the tribes farther west and north and south, they had the poetic and imaginative faculty in a greater degree-They came nearer than any to the creation of a literature of their own. This particular study came as an afterthought in Charles Leland's life of half serious, half humorous philological and ethnological study. The Hans Breitmann Ballads can hardly be called serious literature, but it is including Gypsy language and folk ore, Chinese English, Egyptian English, classical German translation and gleanings in the by-paths of all manner of unwritten literature

Hon. A. S. White has not fared badly since his defeat in Sunbury and Queens in 1900. He seems to have received from the provincial government $2,200 in 1903, all on account of the revision of the statutes. There is evidently more given to boasting of its merits, enter- ment Mr. White received in 1901-1902 to follow.
