Overfeeding Work Horses.

It is perfectly safe to assert that thou sands of work horses are injured by kindness. The owner thinks that because his team is hard worked it ought to be heavily fed, but he forgets that is is not what a horse eats, but what it digests, that counts. This is especially the case in summer, when there is much field work to be done and little time in which to do it.

The horse hurries home, hot and weary the horse names nome, not and weary, is given all he can "hog," and goes out to the water trough, where he fills up on water and goes to work again. First of all, his stomach was not in fit condition for food reception. The fatigued, hot, sweaty horse cannot digest food. He needs a rest first and then a drink of water which passes through his stomach and dency to diarrhoea. They will do bette stays in the large intestines. If he eats grain and then drinks water the food gest a greater proportion of its nutrients is largely washed out by the water, and not properly fed with six quarts of oats and all the hay he can gobble in the short interim of the noon hour. He has been fit from his food. All the benefit de rived comes from the portion of the food digested, and that is very small when ere is not sufficient time to masticate properly and then digest normally.

In the busy season the work ould have small amounts of concentrated, nutritious food—just such an amount while the horse is at work. It does not remain in the stomach, but, like water, passes through into the large intestines, where it lies inert or decomposing until a period of rest promotes the normal process of digestion. On general principles it will pay to cut in two the ration now being fed to work horses, provided they are given little time to masticate and digest their food. This will be found remedial where houses are evidently doing poorly, sweating too much panting when at work, or having a ten-dency to diarrhoea. They will do better on less food for the reason that they di-Hay in summer time should only be passes to the small and large intestines, in which such food is not digested, but decomposes, gives up gas, and thus sets up more or less disturbance and distress.

The horse show, a strong feature, es ecially in drafts, of which there is a ighly creditable exhibit.

Fruit is the best shown for years. There is little competition from the mainland Messrs. Black and Archibald being the principal exhibitors, with herds of cattle The attendance is good for the opening day. A big crowd is expected tomorrow A large field of racing horses is on hand and interesting contests are expected to morrow, local and foreign flyers being well
