men's morals are rather lax in this matter of umbrellas, Mr. Whitechoker?" he added, turning from the School-Master, who began to show signs of irritation.

"Very," said the Minister, running his finger about his neck to make the collar which had been sent home from the laundry by mistake set more easily—"very lax. At the last Conference I attended, some person, forgetting his high office as a minister in the Church, walked off with my umbrella without so much as a thank you; and it was embarrassing, too, because the rain was coming down in bucketfuls."

"What did you do?" asked the landlady, sympathetically. She liked Mr. Whitechoker's sermons, and, beyond this, he was a more profitable boarder than any of the others, remaining home to luncheon every day and having to pay extra therefor.

"There was but one thing left for me to do. I took the bishop's umbrella," said Mr. Whitechoker, blushing slightly.

"But you returned it, of course?" said the Idiot.

"I intended to, but I left it on the train on my way back home the next day," replied bserved 't at the ments ''

ry yes-

lry on

of men

lom to

nbrella

me, or,

remain

oops, as

ot, quite

sarcastic

ers," rethe one

Schoolseue, " is in quesossession shed, "it ou think