Students, Attention!

Rare Chance to Secure a College Education.

We have made arrangements that enable us to place within the reach of a limited number of deserving students, opportunities for securing, on easy terms, a classical or commercial education. A little work during the vacation season will secure this for the one worthily striving for such a boon, but who may not be in possession of sufficient money to realize his heart's desire. The facilities at our disposal enable us to offer a year's board and tuition at

St. Dunstan's College

to any three young men who will fulfill the necessary, easy conditions required. These may be beginners, or former students of the College who have not been able to complete their course. In addition to this we have at our disposal four scholarships at the of Charlottetown. A full course in this excellent Commercial College may be won by any four young men or women, in town or country, who will fulfill the easy conditions we require. Whenever anyone satisfies the requirements in either of the cases enumerated he or she will be given a certificate entitling the holder to the educational advantages offered. A rare opportunity is here placed within reach of those desirous of acquiring a good education, and no time should be lost in taking advantage thereof. Only a little work is required in order to secure the coveted boon, and all can easily be accomplished during this summer's vacation, so that the winners may enter either college at the opening of the next academic year.

A Catholic Scene Switzerland.

Mr. William Redmond, M. P., who was in Switzerland recently, describes in the Weekly Freeman of Dublin, the enthusiastic welcome given by the people of Zermatt to the Bishop who was coming to the village church to administer the Sacrament of Confirmation to the children. All the morning there had been an unusual stir in the village, the church bell was ringing its most joyous peal, and villagers in holiday attire were flocking thither and thither. In a procession led by a band they proceeded to the cathedral station. Mr. Redmond writes:—

A venerable old man stepped on the platform and every head was immediately uncovered.

THE BISHOP HAD ARRIVED and all Zermatt seemed to know it, and to rejoice. Particularly did the little bell in the steeple of the church at the other end of the town seem to know it, for it clanged out a noisy welcome more breathlessly than ever, and even the swelling sound of the brass band could not drown its voice. It was a really touching sight to see the Zermatt people—great rugged mountaineers, women bright with youth and bent with age, and wee children, all thronging joyfully round the old white-haired man, who was to them the high representative and living embodiment of the Faith which, to these people, is something dearer than their very lives. It was no formal welcome that this venerable old prelate got—it was heartfelt. The people were delighted to see him, and they let him know it in every way they could. I remember once, many years ago, also!

SEEING DR. CROKE ARRIVING AT THURLES. The warm-hearted Tipperary people crowded around him in ecstasy. I was reminded of that scene by the welcome accorded to the Bishop in Zermatt. Only these Swiss mountain men were less demonstrative and more stolid than the gallant hearts of Tipperary. Nevertheless, the welcome to Zermatt was real and hearty, and if there was less loud cheering than there would have been in Thurles, still the attitude of the people was whole-hearted, and it was easy to see that, according to their quiet natures, they were bestowing the highest marks of their esteem and pleasure upon the old man who had come up to their far mountain home to strengthen and confirm them in the Faith of their fathers. Preceded by the band and accompanied by practically the whole crowd, the visiting Bishop wended his way into the town. At the arch which I have mentioned a halt was called; and here with much ceremony his Lordship was invested with his robes, and then, with mitre on head and crozier in hand, he commenced his progress down the long street towards the church, the bell of which kept on ringing on him all the time.

AN IMPRESSIVE SIGHT. It would be hard to imagine more picturesque or impressive sight than the procession as it moved along the narrow thoroughfare. Immediately surrounding the Bishop were the smallest of the children, and really some of them barely reached above his knee. The little girls in their snow-white dresses wore simple wreaths of flowers in their hair and carried nosegays in their hands. It was the prettiest sight in the world to see them toddling along, evidently much impressed with their own importance in the day's proceedings. In strong contrast to the little ones were the great bearded and bronzed men as they slouched along with the sure and heavy tread of men used to perilous excursions in dangerous places where a good foothold may mean all the difference between life and death. Many of these men earn their living as guides, and their days and often their nights are spent away up on the mighty mountain-sides in charge of those who come to the Alps to climb, and who find a wild joy in traversing dangerous crags where but one false step may mean burial forever in some cavernous cavern. Hardy and adventurous spirits are these.

MOUNTAIN GUIDES OF ZERMATT. and not afraid to look death in the face time and time again. Their strong faith is, however, proverbial. Never will they sally forth on a hazardous expedition without first kneeling before the altar in the little church upon which the grim Matterhorn looks down, and no Sunday will they start without hearing Mass.

A Common Sense View of the Confessional.

The Rev. Father Fidelis (James Kent Stone) C. F., during a recent mission to non-Catholics in Philadelphia said:—

"Protestants so often think confession was invented by the priests in order to have the people under their thumb—the poor priest-ridden people." What bunglers these priests must have been to put this practice on Catholics and forget to leave the burden of themselves! Even the Pope has to go down on his knees before some humble friar or monk like myself, and if he makes a bad confession, and does repeat it, it is his own good one, he is damned. Oh, if you only knew it, that burden of bearing confessions is the most terrible thing a priest has to do!

Sitting day after day, week after week, year after year, listening to tales of sorrow and crime, and doing the marvelous work of loosing from sin!

"There is another objection, and I am almost ashamed to touch publicly upon it the outcry against the immorality of the confessional. Well, I was a Protestant once, my dear brethren, but I thank God I never said anything of that kind. There is something so low, so incredibly vulgar, not to say malicious in respectable, well-educated, cultured ladies and gentlemen listening to the vile tales of so-called escaped nuns, and unroofed priests and friars!

"I am speaking to you as an honest convert. When I was going to my first confession, previous to being received into the Church, I stopped off at the city of Newark to visit Bishop Bayley afterwards Archbishop of Baltimore, himself an convert and former Episcopalian minister. I told him I was going to confession. 'You are going to the real thing now,' he said; and I thought of that general confession I had so often read when a Protestant: 'We have done those things which we ought not to have done, and we have left undone those things which we ought to have done, and there is no health in us,' etc. I thought of that sweet, familiar prayer. It is upon my mind now and it all comes back to me. How delightfully general that confession was! But now I had to go into my conscience and seek out the weeds of thirty years that had grown in the garden. When I got through I found it was the 'real thing,' and I felt so light and so happy that I might, with a good run, have jumped across the Schuylkill River."

How To Express One's Thoughts.

FROM "A GENTLEMAN."

Although the desire to write is often kindled by much reading, the power of writing is often paralyzed by the discovery that the reading has been of the wrong kind. Again the type who had read little and that little unsystematically is tempted to lay down his pen in despair. Lord Bacon said that "reading maketh a full man, writing an exact man;" from which we may conclude that he who reads may best utilize his stock of knowledge by learning to write. But he must first read, no matter how keen his observation may be or how original his thoughts are; for a good style does not come by nature. It must be the expression of temperament as well as thought; but it must have acquired clearness and elegance, which are due to the construction of sentences in the good company of great authors. To write, you must read; and you must read critically. To read a play of Shakespeare's only for the story is to degrade Shakespeare to the level of the railway novel. It is better to have read the trial scene in 'Merchant of Venice' critically; missing no shade in Portia's character; or speech; no expression of Shylock's, than to have read all Shakespeare carelessly. To make a specialty of literature, one must be above all, thorough. The writings that live have a thousand fine points in them upon the casual reader, and, like the carriage mentioned in 'Miss Donnelly's fine poem,' 'Unseen, yet Seen,' known only to God. Take ten lines of any great writer, examine them closely with the aid of all the critical power you have, and then you will see that simplicity in literature is produced by the art which conceals art. That style which is easiest to read is the hardest to write. Genius has been defined as the capacity for taking infinite pains.

There is a passage in 'Ben Hur' which seems to me particularly applicable to our subject. You remember, in the chariot-race, where Ben Hur's cruel experience in the galleys serves him so well. He would not have had the strength of hand or the steadiness of posture were it not for the work with the oars and the constant necessity of standing on a deck which was even more unsteady than the swaying chariot. "All experience," says the author, "is useful." This is especially true for the writer. One can hardly write a page without feeling how little one knows; and if the great aim of knowledge be to attain that consciousness, the writer sooner attains it than other men.

Items of Interest.

Commenting on the Cuban rebellion the Catholic Citizen says: "President Roosevelt has solicited all good citizens of Cuba to put a stop to this lawlessness in the interests of their republic. If law can not be enforced and order can not be maintained, the United States is bound to intervene. This country can now see the sort of people that Spain had to deal with in Cuba—how restless they are, how easily disaffected with constituted authority, how quick to revolt, how impetuous, unreasonable and destructive!"

"During these fall and winter months," says the Catholic Citizen, "much of the joy of life" consists in our reading—that delightful occupation of the home—about the cozy fireside or under the family lamp. And the weekly paper—filled with all good, reasonable, and unalloyed 'things of the mind' and affairs of the day, is a sine qua non—a something-not-to-be-without—in the intelligent Christian home. It makes the conversation of the household, sets up the best ideals and passes an increasing pleasure around to every one of us. Do not be without this boon."

The Leader says: "There is nothing odious about the title of 'Black Pope.' The Roman people thus designated the General of the Jesuits because of his black habit, which is in contrast to the white cassock of the real Pope. In fact, the name is complimentary in so far as it indicates his vast influence and glorious privileges. He is the commander of a compact and well disciplined army, which has always rendered splendid services to the Church of God."

The Catholic Citizen was sarcastic at the Catholic societies which meet in convention and adopt resolutions gratefully acknowledging the service rendered by the Catholic press. "Then," comments the Citizen, "the delegates go home and wonder why the Catholic papers do not team with reports of their sayings and doings. The magnanimity of the average convention seldom goes further than 'resolving' and appointing a press committee, warranted to go asleep at a moment's notice, to be roused from its slumbers only by the motion to adjourn."

The ninth convention of the Ohio Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, which was held recently in Canton was a large and generally harmonious gathering," says the Catholic Universe. "Notable incidents of the convention were the visits of delegations from the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and their auxiliary, the Daughters of America who were in convention in Canton at the same time with the C. M. B. A. The friendly overture of this body, which has a well-grounded reputation for anti-Catholic spirit as the A. P. A., was the surprise of the convention, and the best possible proof of the dying out of prejudice in this country. Both delegations were courteously received by the C. M. B. A. The address of their chairman was very felicitously responded to by Rev. M. W. Mulhane. A committee was appointed to escort the ladies back to their hall. This escort was greeted with an ovation. Its chairman, O. J. Benkeki, of Cleveland, made an address, which was warmly received."

Irish exchanges chronicle the death of a distinguished Franciscan, Very Rev. J. B. Cooney, of Clonmel. Father Cooney was born in Armagh in 1842, and was ordained in Rome in 1868. He was attached to many houses of the Franciscan order in Ireland during his career and occupied the position of guardian at Dublin, Drogheda and Clonmel respectively. His connection with the latter city extended to close on to a quarter of a century. Shortly after his arrival in Clonmel he set about rebuilding the Franciscan abbey, which was destroyed by the Cromwell soldiers.
