Shot Himself.

London, Dec. 24.—A retired police inspector with a reputation for bravery, was found shot in the cloak room of West Croydon railway station. He was William Mason, seventy-three, who was chief police inspector at Croydon twenty years ago. There was a bullet wound in his mouth and a revolver was clenched in his hand. In one of the pockets of his coat was found the brief note: "To my dearest one:—Broken down and a broken heart."

The dead man, it is stated, was greatly affected by the death of his wife three years ago, and last spring suffered a nervous breakdown.

He was promoted to the rank of chief inspector after an exciting adventure with four burglars on the Uxbridge-road. As he was riding on horseback he became suspicious of two men who were driving a car, and was subsequently found to contain a large quantity of silver plate which had been stolen from the local rectory. Two other men were concealed in the bottom of the car. Mason called upon them to stop but they refused. Then, getting hold of the horse's head, he backed the car into a ditch, and tackled the burglars with his riding crop. Two of them he succeeded in binding to the car, but the other two escaped.

When he retired from the force he was presented with a clock and a cheque by the inhabitants of Croydon for a substantial amount.

PRESENTATION.—A deputation of citizens from the West End met Deputy Mayor Martin at his home last night and presented him with a handsome gold watch and chain. The recipient in a neat speech thanked the donors for their gift and assured them that he greatly appreciated it.

Death of Mr. J. Furlong

The New York World of the 23rd ult., contains a notice of the death at Brooklyn on the 10th, of December, of Mr. John T. Furlong, son of the late Hon. James Furlong of this city. The deceased was at one time in partnership with his brothers James and Lawrence and conducted a large dry goods business on Water Street, where Jackman the Tailor has his business to-day. Both of his brothers pre-deceased him. He was married to a daughter of Mr. Frecker of St. Pierre, and left this city many years ago for the United States.
