

Jeannie Sinclair,
OR,
THE LILY OF THE STRATH.

As they came nearer to the Mokelumne, their meetings with the diggers grew more and more frequent, and the intelligence of their good fortune spread like wildfire, and excited extraordinary commotion. Before night hundreds had struck their tents and departed in search of the new Eldorado. We may just add here that the valley in which the three companions found the monster nugget was in a few weeks filled with diggers, that William's anticipation was fulfilled, and that thousands flocked to the place from all quarters, most of whom met with substantial success, while several did make their fortune, and return to their homes to enjoy a position of independence. The fame of the new diggings spread through America, and across the Atlantic to Europe, and created a positive future of excitement, producing also a gold fever which was very infectious—so much so as nearly to depopulate some of the western cities.

Our friends, the discoverers of this fertile gold field, had little interest in its subsequent fortunes, and sought no personal advantage as thousands did who were attracted towards its auriferous deposits. While the excitement was but beginning, they were preparing to leave California altogether—the purpose of their coming there having been fully served.

On reaching the Mokelumne encampment with their nugget all safe, they went to Moses Levi, in the hope that would purchase it from them, and so relieve them from the dangerous burden. But they found that a nugget of that size was not so easily bought and sold. Its weight was estimated at eighty pounds, and it was considered to be worth more than three thousand. Had Moses Levi been asked to enter into the transaction some months before, when he arrived at the diggings, he would have been able to buy the golden mass, but the many purchases he had since made had exhausted his stock of cash, and he was on the eve of journeying with these to San Francisco to dispose of them, he hoped profitably, in the market there. The Jew had just entered into an arrangement with Jonathan Bardie to accompany him, and to transport his goods in his waggon. Jonathan had by this time got his stock of "notions" disposed of, and was about to depart to San Francisco for more. It was therefore advantageous to have his waggons freighted with the Jew's valuable property, and the matter being mutually beneficial, the bargain was soon and satisfactorily concluded, and they had agreed to depart in two days.

In the circumstances, Moses suggested to William Denman that the nugget could also be transported in the American's waggons, that they could all go together for the safety and protection of their property, and that on their arrival in San Francisco the nugget could easily be sold there; that he himself would there be in a position to purchase it.

The proposition of the Jew was favourably regarded by William and the others. It was, in truth, the best arrangement they had it in their power to make, and they at once hastened to the American to have it concluded. Jonathan and they readily came to terms. Not only was he able to obtain a handsome sum for conveying the nugget, but the addition of three strong men to their company was a most important benefit. The journey was well known to be a highly dangerous one, the region through which they had to pass being frequented with robbers, who lay in wait for returning diggers to rob them of their gold dust. Bands of these desperate characters were reported to have laagered themselves for this purpose and as they were composed of the vilest and most abandoned wretches, those who came in contact with them, unless they were able to defend themselves received little mercy.

For various reasons, therefore, travelling in company was a desirable arrangement to make, and the thing having been settled, the two days of interval were spent in making preparations for the journey—in procuring the necessary stock of provisions, and purchasing arms, ammunition to enable them to repel the attack which might be made upon them.

When the appointed morning came, all was ready, and the waggons being packed, the little procession departed amid the cheers and good wishes of the assembled diggers. With no sighs of regret, but with glad and hopeful hearts, William, Robert and Watty bade farewell to the banks of the Mokelumne and began the long, long journey back to Strathmae.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

OTTAWA, May 29.

Mr. Oliver presented a report from the select committee appointed to consider the best means of relieving the country from the existing plethora of American silver. The committee expressed their opinion that all private efforts to remove the silver from circulation having failed, the intervention of the Government had become necessary. They recommended that the plan adopted by the Government last year by which $1,000,000 were exported to England, or any other plan which would have the same result, be resorted to until an amount equal to $5,000,000 should be withdrawn from the circulation of the country.

The resolutions respecting the acquisition of the North West Territory were concurred in, and on motion of Sir G. E. Cartier, seconded by Hon. Mr. McDougall, it was resolved "that an address embodying the resolutions be presented to Her Majesty, and that a select committee composed of Sir John A. McDonald, Sir Geo. E. Cartier, Hon. Mr. McDougall, Hon. Mr. Tilley, Hon. Mr. Chauveau, and Dr. Grant, be appointed to draw up such address." The address was then introduced, read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed; and a message was ordered to be sent to the Senate acquainting that body that the address had been passed, and requesting their concurrence.

The Bill respecting patents of invention was read a second time.

The Bill respecting emigrants and emigration was read a second time and ordered to be referred to committee of the whole, on Tuesday next with the resolution.

The House then went into committee of supply, when several items were passed.

NEURALGIA.—If your nerves seem to snap and crack, jerk and jump, and play all sorts of pranks, from the top of your head to the tips of your toes, now shooting forth like lightning along one unfortunate nerve, and now trying to the another into a thousand knots, then attempting to make a bowstring of another, sometimes in the region of the heart, again in the face, head, neck, &c. in short if you have neuralgia in its worst form, with all the agony distilled to its most excruciating degree, use Dr. J. Briggs' Alleviator, and in a trice, your neuralgia, with all his demons has departed, and once again you will know how to live without it. Sold by druggists and country merchants. Dr. J. Briggs & Co., 209 Broadway, N. Y., and No 6 King Street, West, Toronto. For sale by E. Harvey & Co., Guelph.

A gentleman in Rochester, S. H., saw an advertisement that a receipt for the cure of dyspepsia might be had by sending a postage stamp to the advertiser.—He was a victim and sent his stamp. The answer was, "Dig in your garden, and let whiskey alone."
