Sir John Carling Struck Off the Ontario Voters' List.

Proceedings of the Court of Revision-An Assessor Serving Two Masters.

Wednesday Afternoon. The afternoon session of the court of revision was devoted principally to the occasional addition sandwiched in when a mechanic could find time to attend. Many objections were presented by both parties | given votes in Class B. and the names struck off. A great many repeaters were also attended to.

The proceedings were of a dreary, drowsy kind, without change, and seemingly interminable. To an uninitiated person looking on it would be difficult to say whether Assessor McCoubrey is working in the interest of the voters' list as a whole or for the Conservative party. | that a man could have two residences, City Clerk Kingston and Assessment Commissioner Grant maintain an impartial Sir John Carling was shifted to class B-s. bearing or a discreet silence, but Assessor McCoubrey and the assistant, H. This he did on Tuesday afternoon in the case of James Chisholm. Again this afternoon he flourished about his head a registered letter receipt book to show the service of a subpæna. Both these individuals (drawing city pay) speak of a Conservative case as "ours" and a Liberal case as "theirs." One of the objections that cropped up yesterday was evidently entitled to a vote, and the Liberal lawyers were willing to admit the fact. Mr. Hellmuth was out just then, and Mr. McCoubrey took upon his shoulder the responsibility of settling the matter.

"If you waive your objection 'we' will, said he.

Whether he referred to the assessors or the Tory party by "we" he did not state. Richard Jupp's name was repeated, and there was a little wrangle as to where he should be left on. "He is too good a Tory to be struck off in both places," said Mr. Irwin. Henry Betts' case had been argued. "I suppose the application should be dismissed, should it not?" said Mr. Cowan.

"Not necessarily," answered Mr. Irwin, and the case was allowed to stand over. These among similar incidents tend to show that both Mr. McCoubrey and Mr. Irwin use their civic positions to the fur-

THE SINGLE TAX.

By Messis, Ashplant, Johnston and Others, Pro and Con-Some Ideas Worth Thinking About,

The single tax debate at Labor Hall was continued before a large audience last night. Messrs. John Johnston and H. Ashplant again entered the lists as the respective champions of single tax and antisingle tax.

Mr. Johnston resumed his line of argument towards the conclusion that single tax was not only the best method of taxation but the remedy for social poverty. The application of the system, he said, would cause property owners to either throw their vacant land, held for speculation, into the market or to build houses on it. The throwing of so much land on the market would lower its price and thus lower rents, and then small purchasers of land would reap the advantage. This would cheapen the laborer's cost of living. The capitalist, knowing this, would seek to cut his empleyes' wages down. There were only two ways for the laborer to prevent the reduction and keep the "vantage of cheaper living. They were by sending members to Parliament willing to legislate in his interest, and by trade unions - by combining and compelling the capitalist to maintain the wage standard. Mr. Johnston condemned the present apprentice system. Apprentices did onefourth of the work of the country, which legitimate workmen should do. Instead of oinding the apprentice to a capitalist for five years at an early age, he should be did not affect the wage question because taught his trade at an industrial school wages always found their level, as the above when 18 or 19 years old, at which age he comparison showed. The purchasing could learn as much in two years as he power of thee community was not equal to now learns in five. By the elimination of the production. Millions of tons of goods the apprentice system there would be more work for laborers-the lowest stratum of the industrial classes-and their wages the equivalent of their labor which prowould accordingly rise. So would the duced those goods. The laborer should wages of the higher classes of labor, share the profit of his labor and then When the capitalist found that trade matters would be equalized. unionism prevented him lowering wages, his only way of reducing expenses in order to meet competition would be cent would have his purchasing power by educating the laborer to the increased to $15 a week if that tariff were highest degree and by improving machinery. Henry George had shown that production was cheapest in the countries production highest where wages were lowest. This was the effect of education and skill. Mr. Johnston said he was Grit to the backbone on the tariff question. Single tax would do away with every vestige of the expensive customs system. The great and costly army of customs collectors and spies would disappear. The municipality would simply collect a little more taxes on the land. A part would be given to the Provincial Government, who would in turn hand over a share to the Dominion Government to keep it running. At the least calculation one-third the exrich and poor alike and the laborer's cost of would be direct or indirect benefit to all. living would be cheapened. The customs was an expensive and wasteful method of taxation. Under single tax the present | strike at the root of the evil. municipal officers would collect all taxes at no extra expense. Mr. Johnston wished another evening in which to show how it would do away with the present but might be less able to pay taxes. system of banking and interest, and in which to bring his arguments to a focus. It is not good policy, to say nothing about good taste, to allow half the summer to slip by without having bought a parasol, when you can procure a good one now at exactly the same price. An almost indispensable article to a lady is a good parasol. Mothers sometimes buy what we call a lady's umbrella, which will keep out the rain and keep off the sun. But the young people must have both. It is right, too. They are made to sell, and they do sell. It is not extravagant to have a parasol and an umbrella. You don't time.

held from the producers (the workers) that share of what they (the workers) themselves produced, which share was known as profits, and all went into the pockets of the employer. The evil was not the rent of land, but the rent of human bodies and the putting into the capitalist's pocket of the product of their labor. The proposition to keep up the standard of wages by legislation was bosh. By raising the wages the cost of produce was raised, and the wageearner only had to pay more for his goods. In England wages were lower than here. but the cost of living was also lower. In the United States wages were higher than here; so was the cost of living. Canada was in an intermediate state. The tariff were lying stored up, while millions of people were starving because they had not

Mr. Cummings said that a man making $10 a week under a customs tariff of 50 per abolished, because his goods would be 50 per cent cheaper. The land belonged to the people. Rent went into the private where wages were highest, and the cost of pocket of the landlord, whereas if it-or part of it-went into the national treasury it would run the Government and there would be no need of a tariff. By taking off the tariff how would it reduce wages? It would only cheapen the cost of goods; it had nothing to do with wages. That was a matter between the capitalist and the worker. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. George Taylor said it had been asked what benefit there would be in taking the taxes off McClary's buildings. If there were no protective tariff and combines and the taxes were taken off McClary's establishment his wares would be produced and pense of government would be taken off the | sold cheaper by just that amount, and there Mr. Green favored Mr. Ashplant's argu-

If you don't want to decide at once take a look around and we will be pleased to see you back after you have SATISFIED yourself that YOU CANNOT DO AS WELL ELSE-WHERE. Prompt and pleasant attention to your wants.

Leads off well this season. So far our trimmers have been unusually successful with their productions. Our lady friends not only seem well pleased, but do not hesitate to say that OUR DISPLAY IS FINE. We are ALSO MAKING LARGE SALES. Two things are certain. First, that our styles are taking; and second. our prices low. Customers this season particularly are looking for natty, stylish headwear that is not too expensive. This trade we have laid ourselves out to cater for, and we are doing it successfully, too. We can and are selling stylish Hats cheaper than other people. A great many ladies of good taste have pronounced cur Bonnets ahead of anything they have seen. We are particularly strong in the Bonnets and can suit you. Comfortable, good-fitting stylish Bonnets at less price than others ask. INSPECTION INVITED.
