About 30 other tenants also escaped through the side entrance to the house, and they now stood on the sidewalk yelling stairway to the fourth floor. When he reached the landing he shouted two or three times to find whether there was anyone on that floor. No one answered, and the policeman went up the next flight of stairs.

While being carried up the last flight of stairs Mrs. Kallenden revived, and, on reaching the top, she was able to walk. O'Connor groped along the hall until he found a door that was un-locked, and Mrs. Kallenden pointed out the fire escape. The window was closed, and O'Connor smashed it with his right hand. In doing this both his hands were badly cut, and his right index finger was nearly severed. He carried Mrs. Rivers out on the fire escape and led Mrs. Kallenden. Then he shouted to the firemen, who had just arrived. They swarmed up the escape and helped the women and the policemen to reach the ground. His wounds were dressed at St. Mark's Hospital. Bicycle Police McLoughlin, of the Union Market station, tried to enter the building soon after O'Connor. He failed, and his eyebrows were burned off in his attempt. Policeman Norton, of the East Fifth street station, also tried to get into the building, and his hand was badly cut. The fire was confined to Mr. Phillips' parlor. The flat was expensively furnished, and Mr. Phillips thinks that the damages amounted to about $2,500.
